PREFATORY NOTE

THE present volume marks the fourth and last of the collected Letters of St. Basil in the Loeb Classical Library and includes Letters CCXLIX to CCCLXVIII. Of these, the last two are here added to the corpus of Basil's letters for the first time. Furthermore, many of the later letters of this volume appear here with an English translation for the first time. Most of the dubia and spuria are included in this volume, and wherever possible I have attempted to summarize the best scholarly opinion regarding their authenticity and to add such new evidence as I have been able to find.

The text of this fourth volume has been treated exactly as that of the second and third volumes. Letters CCXLIX to CCCLVI, exclusive of Letter CCCII, appear in the MS. known as Coisslinianus 237 (sig. = E), and do not occur in any of the other MSS. collated by me. Letters CCCII and CCCLVII to CCCLXVIII appear in no MS. collated by me. Accordingly, as in the preceding two volumes, the readings from E are my own, all others have been taken over from the Benedictine and Migne editions, and the sigla used in these editions, though often unique, have been kept in all cases. As hitherto, by editi antiqui I mean all editions prior to the Benedictine; by editi all existing editions.

PREFATORY NOTE

For assistance in bringing the present volume to completion I wish to thank the members of my Greek Seminar during the academic years of 1928-29 and 1929-30. I wish to thank also Sister M. J. Annette of the Sisters of Mercy of Hartford, Connecticut, for very valuable assistance in preparing the MS. for the printer. At the completion of my entire task of four volumes, it would be ungrateful indeed did I not mention the unceasing patience and scholarly contributions throughout of Professor Edward Capps, one of the editors of the Loeb Classical Library.

ROY J. DEFERRARI.

THE BASIL-LIBANIUS CORRESPONDENCE

LIBANIUS was the greatest of the pagan rhetoricians of the fourth century. Basil was for a short period one of his pupils; and Libanius is said to have possessed great admiration for the extraordinary intelligence and virtue of the young Christian. Twenty-five letters, CCCXXXV to CCCLIX, in the Benedictine edition of Basil's letters have been ascribed to a correspondence between these two men. The authenticity of this correspondence, however, has been the subject of much dispute.

The general status of the question to-day may be summarized as follows: Letters CCCXXXVI to CCCXLIII, and Letters CCCXLV and CCCLVIII, are authentic because of their position in the manuscript tradition and because of the historical information contained therein; Letters CCCXLIV and CCCXLVI are authentic because of their position next to Letter CCCXLV in the Aa family, and because of the relation of Letter CCCXLIV to Letter CCCXLIII; Letters CCCXLVII to CCCLVI are spurious in spite of the mention of the speech of Libanius in several of them, since they are ignored in the best manuscripts both of Basil and Libanius, and since their content and style are quite unworthy of the two men; Letters CCCLVII and CCCLIX are spurious or at least very doubtful, because they are lacking in all the Basilian manuscripts, and no positive reason exists for considering them authentic.

The entire question, however, needs to be studied anew, especially in the light of our new knowledge of the manuscript tradition and of our better understanding of St. Basil's language.

The following works will give the reader a history of the controversy and a detailed presentation of the status of the question:

WITHOUT ADDRESS, WITH REFERENCE TO A PIOUS MAN¹

I CONGRATULATE this brother, both for freeing himself from the tumults of this world and for visiting your Reverence. For a good viaticum has he chosen for himself to the future world—a goodly life with those who fear the Lord. And him do we commend to your Honour, and I urge you through him to pray for our miserable life, that being freed from these present trials we may begin to serve the Lord according to the Gospel.

TO PATROPHILUS, BISHOP OF THE CHURCH OF AEGAE²

LATE indeed did I receive the answers to my former letters, but nevertheless I did receive them through

DURING the controversy between Eustathius, Bishop of Sebaste, and St Basil, their mutual friend, Patrophilus, Bishop of Aegae, was troubled about his relations with the two opposing bishops. For some time he pursued the policy of silence with respect to Basil. When finally persuaded to resume his correspondence with Basil, he addressed himself to him on behalf of Eustathius. Basil replied with Letter CCXLV, wherein he laments the errors of Eustathius and asks

But if agreement with the harmful under the appearance of peace brings acts of hostility upon those who accept it, consider who those are with whom they have mingled—men who hated us with an unjust hatred; who belong, moreover, to the faction of those not in communion with us; for I need not now mention them by name. These have even been summoned by them to Sebaste, and they have taken over the church, and they have performed the sacrifice on the altar,² and they have shared their own bread with all the laity,³ being proclaimed bishops by the clergy there,¹ and being estorted by them throughout the whole country as if they were saints and in communion. If we must adopt the faction of these men, it is ridiculous to begin with the toe-nails instead of addressing ourselves to their very heads.²

Now, if we ought to regard nobody at all as heretical nor turn away from him, for what reason, tell me, do you separate yourself and avoid the communion of some? But if any are to be shunned, let them, precise as they are in all things, follow the methods of precision and tell us to what faction those belong whom they have invited from Galatia to join them?

If these matters seem deplorable to you, attribute the separation to those who are responsible for these things; but if you judge these things indifferent, forgive us for not suffering ourselves to become of the leaven of those who teach a different doctrine³ Therefore, if so it seems best, discarding those specious arguments, with all outspokenness refute those who do not walk uprightly according to the truth of the Gospel.⁴

But not only have they fallen into this contradiction, of offering you their own writings in place of a formal accusation,³ but also into this—that, even when they were unanimously deposed by those assembled at Constantinople,⁴ they did not accept their deposition, calling the body a gathering of rebellious men,⁵ and refusing to speak of them⁶ as bishops, hoping thus to prevent them from ratifying the vote cast against them. And they added, as the reason for their⁷ not being bishops, the fact that, as their accuser says, they were the leaders of a wicked heresy. But this⁸ happened almost seventeen years ago. you. And those who now control the churches are the successors of those we have named, some having been ordained in their places, others having been promoted by those men themselves.

Now, therefore, let those who accuse us of heterodoxy tell us how those were heretics whose deposition they did not accept, and how these are orthodox who were promoted by the former and maintain the same opinions as their fathers. For if Euippius was orthodox, how is not Eustathius, who has been deposed by him, a layman? But if the former was a heretic, how can anyone who was promoted by his hand be in communion with Eustathius now? Nay, these are childish things, spoken childishly, for their own advantage, against the churches of God, by men who attempt both to slander persons and again to commend them.

Eustathius, when passing through Paphlagonia, overturned the altars of Basilides¹ of Paphlagonia, and offered sacrifice on his own tables; and now he is a suppliant of Basilides, to the end of being accepted by him. He excommunicated our most reverend brother Elpidius on account of his union with those at Amasia,² and now he is a suppliant of the Amasenes, seeking union with them. As for his proclamations against Euippius, even you yourselves understand how frightful they were. And now those who think as Euippius does he reveres for their orthodoxy, provided only that they shall contribute to his effort to restore Euippius. And we are being accused, not because we do any wrong, but because he thought that this brings him glory among the people at Antioch. And as to those whom they summoned last year from Galatia, with the idea that through them they could obtain the full liberty of the episcopacy, they are of such a character, as even they know who have lived but a short time with them; but, as for me, may the Lord not grant me at any time so much leisure that I may recount their deeds! And yet they, escorted by their most honoured body-guard and fellow-initiates, have passed through their entire country, receiving the honours and attentions of the bishops; and they have been conducted ostentatiously into the city, holding assemblies with full authority. For the laity has been given over to them; the altar has been given over. Now when these men, having proceeded as far as Nicopolis, were able to accomplish nothing that they had promised, how they came back and how they were looked on during their return journey, those who were present know. So clear it is that they always do everything they do with a view to their own advantage. But if they say that they have repented, let them give proof in writing of their repentance, and of their anathematization of the Creed of Constantinople,¹ and of their separation from the heretics, and let them not deceive the more untainted. So much in characterization of their actions.

But we, beloved brethren, small and lowly as we are, yet always the same by the grace of God, have never been affected by the vicissitudes in events. Our Creed is not one at Seleucia, and

For, as we have received it from the Lord, so do we baptize; as we baptize, so do we believe; as we believe, so do we also pronounce the doxology, neither separating the Holy Spirit from the Father and Son, nor placing Him before the Father, nor saying that the Spirit is older than the Son, as the tongues of blasphemers contrive.² For who is so daring that, setting aside the Lord's commandment, he dares to invent an order of his own for the names? Nay, neither do we give the name of "creature" to the Spirit, who is ranked with Father and Son, nor do we dare to call a servant Him who is in command.³ And we beseech you, being mindful of the threat of the Lord, who said "Every sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven men, but the blasphemy of the Holy Spirit shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come,"⁴ to keep yourselves from the wicked teachings against the Spirit. THE honours of martyrs are eagerly sought after by all who hope in the Lord, and especially by you who lay claim to virtue, who by your disposition towards those of your fellow-servants who have won renown ² display your loyalty to our common Master; but particularly because life under discipline has something akin to those lives which have been made perfect by fortitude. Since, then, Eupsychius and Damas and the chorus of their followers are most celebrated martyrs, whose memory is observed yearly by our city and all the surrounding country, the Church, calling upon you through our voice, reminds you, its own special glory, to take up your ancient custom of making the visit. Knowing, therefore, that a great work lies before you among the laity who are seeking edification in you, and that a reward is laid up for the honouring of the martyrs,³ accept civil divisions established by Constantine. The present letter is an invitation to the annual celebration in honour of the martyrs Eupsychius and Damas. On these martyrs, cf. Letters CXLII and CLXXVI with notes. Eupsychius was martyred under Julian for his part in the demolition of the temple of Fortune. Cf. Soz. 5. 11, and Greg. Naz. Letter to Basil LVIII. TO THE PRESBYTERS OF ANTIOCH¹

THE solicitude which you have for the churches of God² our most beloved and most reverend brother Sanctissimus, fellow-presbyter, will on the one hand allay, when he has related the affection and good disposition towards us on the part of the whole West; but on the other hand he will both arouse and provoke it still more when he has in person clearly represented to you how much zeal the present situation demands. For everyone else has reported to us, as it were but half-way, both the opinions of the men there and the condition of their affairs; but he, being himself capable of observing men's purposes and of examining accurately into the condition of affairs, will tell you all, and will guide your own good zeal in all. Therefore, you have matter that befits the excellent purpose which you have always shown in your solicitude for the churches of God.

TO PELAGIUS, BISHOP OF SYRIAN LAODICEA ¹

MAY the Lord grant to me also some day to come into the presence of your true Piety, and, whatever we have omitted in our writing, this to supply in person. For we have been late in beginning to write, and we have great need of apology. But since our most beloved and reverend brother Sanctissimus, fellow-presbyter, is at hand, he himself will in person relate all to you, regarding both our affairs and those of the West. And indeed you will be cheered at this, but when he tells of the disturbances that have beset us he will perhaps add some grief and anxiety to the troubles which already are stored up within your good heart. It assuredly is not without avail that you are grieved, you who are able to importune the Lord. For your solicitude will prove timely for our need, and I know that we shall obtain assistance from God, having the co-operation of your prayers. And if you pray with us for relief from our cares, and ask for some increase in the strength of our body, the Lord will speed us to the fulfilment of our desire, that is, to arrive into the presence of your Decorum.

¹ For date and occasion see Letter CCLIII with note Pelagius, Bishop of Laodicea in Syria Prima. At the Council of Constantinople in 381 he was named as one of those orthodox Eastern bishops communion with whom was a test of orthodoxy, and to whom the administration of the churches of the East was entrusted. TO VITUS, BISHOP OF CHARRAE ¹

WOULD that it were possible for me to write to your Reverence every day. For ever since I made the acquaintance of your Affection I have had the great longing to live with you if it were possible, but if not, at least to write and to receive letters, that I may be able both to inform you of my affairs and to learn of your own situation. But since not what we wish is ours, but whatever the Lord gives, this we ought to receive with thanksgiving, we have given thanks to Holy God for having provided us with an occasion for writing to your Reverence—the arrival of our most beloved and reverend brother Sanctissimus, fellow-presbyter, who, having undergone much hardship on the journey, will relate to you with accuracy all that he has learned in the West. For this also ought we to give thanks to the Lord and to adore Him, that He may grant to us also that same peace, and that we may receive each other in a liberal spirit. Greet all the brethren in Christ in our name.

It is likely that the Acacius who is named first is the same Acacius who in 375 had invited Basil in the name of the church of Beroea. Basil's Letter CCXX is an answer to this invitation. This Acacius became most celebrated as bishop of Beroea, but he brought dishonour on his name by his wicked attacks on St John Chrysostom.

•MONKS, FROM BASIL, BISHOP !•

WHEN I heard of that severe persecution which had arisen against you, and that immediately after Easter those who "fasted for debates and strife,"² visiting your tabernacles, consigned your labours to fire, making ready for you that house in heaven which is not made with hands,³ but keeping in store for themselves the fire⁴ that they used with intent to injure you, I groaned at what had happened, not out of pity for you, brethren, God forbid ! but for those who are so overwhelmed by viciousness that they extend their wickedness even to this point.
And I expected that straightway you would all run to a ready refuge, our humble self, and I was in hope that the Lord would grant me a respite from my continuous distresses through my embracing you,

For some time persecution had been harassing the churches of Beroea and Chalcedon, but in the year 376 immediately after Easter the heretics confiscated the dwellings of the monks, destroying them by fire Basil now writes in con-

and that by receiving the noble sweat, which you are shedding in behalf of truth, upon this slothful body of mine, I should have some share in the rewards that are laid up for you by the Judge of truth. But since this course did not even enter your mind, and you did not expect to have any relief from us, I was eager at least to find continual excuses for writing to you, so that, like those who shout encouragement to contestants, I too might by letter call out something to you as encouragement in your noble struggle. But not even this was easy for us for two reasons: one, because we did not know where you were living, and second, because there are not many who travel from us to you.

But now the Lord has brought to us the most beloved and reverend brother Sanctissimus, fellow-presbyter, through whom we both salute your Affection and urge you to pray for us, being glad and rejoicing for that your reward is very great in heaven,¹ and also as having freedom with the Lord not to cease night and day crying to Him,² to the end that this present storm that rocks the churches may cease, and that their shepherds may be given back to the people, and that the Church may return to her own proper esteem. WHAT I said to myself on hearing of the trial brought upon you by the enemies of God, this I thought it well to communicate to you by letter—that at a time believed to be a period of peace you have obtained for yourselves the blessing which is laid up for those who suffer persecution for the name of Christ. For merely because a name³ that is pleasing and gentle includes those who practise evil, we should not for this reason consider that their acts also are not those of enemies. For I judge war brought by fellow-countrymen to be more difficult, since it is easy to guard ourselves against our openly proclaimed enemies, but in the case of men who are intermingled with ourselves, we are necessarily exposed to every kind of injury at their hands; and this you too have experienced. For whereas our fathers also were persecuted,⁴ yet it was by those who worshipped idols ; and their substance was plundered and then homes overthrown, and they themselves were driven into exile by men who openly made war upon us because of the name of Christ. But those who have now appeared as persecutors hate us no less than did those of old, but to deceive the many they put forward the name of Christ, that those who are persecuted may not even have the consolation of confessing it, for the many and simpler folk, while acknowledging that we are being wronged, yet do not account to us as martyrdom our death for the sake of truth. Wherefore I am convinced that a greater reward is laid up by the just Judge for you than for the martyrs of that time, since they not only had the openly acknowledged approbation that comes from men, but received also the reward that comes from God,¹ whereas for you, on the strength of equally righteous deeds, the honours that come from the people are not at hand ; hence it is reasonable to assume that the recompense which is laid up in the next life for your labours in defence of the true religion is many times greater.

Therefore we urge you not to grow faint-hearted in the midst of your tribulations, but to be renewed in your love of God, and daily to add to your zeal, knowing that in you must be preserved that remnant of the true religion which the Lord at His coming will discover upon the earth.² And if bishops have been driven from their churches, let this not move you ;³ or if betrayers⁴ have sprung up from the clergy them-

Cyprus. It appears that he was ordained presbyter by Eutychius, then bishop of Eleutheropolis. In A D 367 he was elected bishop of Constantia in Cyprus, the ancient Salamis, where he governed the church for thirty-six years. Under his influence the whole island was covered with monastic institutions. With the monks of Palestine, and especially with those of his own monastery, he remained in uninterrupted communication. He was convinced that a true bishop must let his voice be heard in all the ecclesiastical controversies of the time.

About A.D. 376 Epiphanius took an active part in the Apollinarian controversies. Vitalis, a presbyter of Antioch, had been consecrated bishop by Apollinaris himself; whereupon Vitalis was visited by Epiphanius, who endeavoured to recall Vitalis from his error and to reconcile him with the orthodox bishop, Paulinus. He failed in his mission. It was after his return from this mission that he wrote to Basil about these and other disturbances. Basil in Letter CCLVII fully explained his position with reference to the church in Antioch.

Though Epiphanius was not present at the Ecumenical Council of Constantinople in A.D. 381, which ensured the triumph of the Nicene Creed in the East, his own creed, found by the experience of events—that “because iniquity hath abounded the charity of many shall grow cold,”¹ this, although it has already prevailed among us, the letter of your Honour which was conveyed to us has seemed to refute. For surely no ordinary proof of charity is it, first, that you were mindful of us who are so insignificant and of no account, then that you also sent brethren to visit us, men fitting to be ministers of letters of peace. For there is no sight rarer than this, when all are now disposed to be suspicious of all. For nowhere is there mercy, nowhere compassion, no brotherly tear for a brother in distress. No persecutions for truth’s sake, no churches whose entire membership groans, not this long series of misfortunes that encompass us, can move us to solicitude for one another. Nay, we leap upon the fallen, we irritate their wounds,² we intensify the spiteful abuse that comes from the heretics, we who are supposed to share the same in his work, the Ancoratus, agrees almost word for word with the Constantinopolitan Creed

Towards the end of A. D. 382 he went to Rome with Jerome and other legates of the Constantinopolitan Synod of A. D. 382 in order to confer with Pope Damasus on the Apollinarian heresy. While in Rome, he was domiciled with the elder Paula. On her trip to Palestine, Paula visited Epiphanius, staying with him about ten days. Jerome also visited him on his own return from Rome. This marks the beginning of an unbroken friendship between Jerome and Epiphanius.

In alliance with Jerome he took up the Origen controversy. The controversies in which Epiphanius engaged illustrate his character. Honest, credulous, a zealot for orthodoxy, he was often found promoting divisions where a moderate course would have enabled him to maintain the peace of the Church.

² Basil has reference here to the doctrines proposed by Apollinaris. Adopting the doctrine of Plato, Apollinaris affirmed three component parts of man—spirit, soul, and body. He maintained that Christ had indeed a human body and human passions, or a sensitive soul, but not a spirit, or rational

Innocent¹ the Italian, in reply to what has been written to us by them, that we can add nothing to the Creed of Nicaea, not even the slightest thing, except the glorification of the Holy Spirit, and this only because our fathers mentioned this topic incidentally, since the question regarding Him had not yet been raised at that time. But the teachings² which are interwoven in that Creed about the incarnation of the Lord we have neither examined into nor accepted, as being too deep for our comprehension,³ knowing that when we once alter the simplicity of the Creed we shall find no end of discussion, since the disputation will lead us ever on and on, and that we shall disturb the souls of the simpler folk by the introduction of what seems strange to them.⁴

But as for the church at Antioch⁵—now I mean the church that is in agreement with the same opinion—may the Lord grant us some day to see it united. For it is especially in danger of being open to the plots of the enemy, who is evilly disposed towards it because it was among the people there soul. This was supplied in Him by the Divine Word, consequently Christ had no human will, which would mean that He was not impeccable. The Apollinarians denied that Christ assumed flesh from the Virgin Mary, His body, which was heavenly and divine, as they maintained, merely passed through her virginal womb.

that the appellation "Christian"¹ first became enfranchised. And while heresy has been divided against orthodoxy, orthodoxy has itself also been divided against itself². But as for us, since he who first spoke freely in behalf of the truth and fought through that noble contest in the reign of Constantius, I mean the most reverend Meletius, is the bishop, and since my church took him into communion, having exceedingly great affection for him because of that steadfast and unyielding stand he made, we have held him in communion until the present day by the grace of God, and shall continue to hold him, if God so will; for the most blessed Pope³ Athanasius also, stopping on his way from Alexandria, especially desired that communion be established between him and Meletius, but through malice of counsellors their union was put off until another time.⁴ Would that it had not been so! But we have never accepted communion with any one of those who entered the see thereafter, not because we considered them unworthy, but because we council and framed a synodical letter in which the Nicene Creed was embodied. On September 5, 363, Athanasius sailed to Antioch bearing this letter. The general prospects of the Church must have seemed brighter than at any time since 330, but the local troubles of Antioch were distressing. Athanasius was at first disposed to recognize Meletius, but the latter, keenly annoyed by the consecration of Paulinus, although Lucifer alone was responsible for it, held aloof from all proposals of accommodation or put off Athanasius with vague promises. The consequence was that Athanasius, who ever since he had worshipped with the Eustathians in 346, had given them his warm sympathy, now recognized their bishop, Paulinus, as the true head of the Antiochene church on his appending to his signature on the synodical letter a full and orthodox declaration.

And yet we have heard many things from the brethren, but we have accepted nothing, because those charged with error were not brought before the accusers according to what is written: "Let not our law judge any man, unless it first hear him, and know what he doth?"¹ Therefore we cannot at this time write to them, most honoured brother, nor ought we to be forced into this. But it would be proper for your peaceful purpose, not to cause union here and disunion there, but to bring over to the unity which originally existed the elements which have become separated. Therefore, in the first place pray, then exhort them also with all your strength, after they have cast out ambition from their souls—both for the restoration of strength to the Church and for the crushing of the insolence of the enemy—to effect a reconciliation among themselves. me with your letter also, I became doubly fond of them. And when I read the letter and saw in it not only the anxious care for the churches shown in your disposition, but also your concern about the reading of the Divine Scriptures, I gave thanks to the Lord; and prayed for blessings upon those who brought such a letter to us, and indeed before them upon him who wrote it to us.

You have asked us about that passage which has been widely talked of and which has been bandied about this way and that by everyone—what its solution is: namely, “Whosoever shall kill Cain shall discharge seven times the things to be expiated.”¹ Now heretofore you have commended yourself to us, as observing strictly the admonition which Paul² gave to Timothy (for it is evident that you are attentive to your reading); then, in the second place, you have taken hold of us who are old and already benumbed both by time and by the weakness of our body, and also by the multitude of the afflictions which have now in great numbers been stirred up round about us and have overburdened our life, and yet, in spite of all this, have restored us, and by your fervour of spirit are bringing us, who were chilled through, like animals hibernating in their dens, back to a measure of wakefulness and to some vital energy.

Now the passage in question is capable both of being interpreted in a quite simple manner and of receiving an elaborate treatment. The simpler meaning, then, and the one that might occur to anyone offhand is this: that Cain must pay a sevenfold punishment for the sins he has committed. For it is not the part of a just judge to determine punishments on the principle of like for like, but he who has been the first to commit a wrong must pay what is due together with something additional, if he is himself to be made better by his punishment and is to make others more virtuous through his example. Therefore, since it has been appointed for Cain to pay the penalty for his sins sevenfold, he who kills him, it says, must satisfy this sentence which has been passed upon him by the divine judgment. This is the sense of the passage that suggests itself to us immediately after the first reading.

But since the mind of the more industrious readers is naturally inclined to search the depths, it inquires how justice is fulfilled in the injunction "sevenfold," and what are "the things to be expiated," whether the sins that have been committed are seven, or the sin one but the punishments seven for the one. Now the Scripture always defines the number of the forgiveness of sins as seven. It says: "How often shall my brother offend against me and I forgive him?" (It is Peter who is speaking to the Lord.) "Till seven times?" Then the answer of the Lord is: "I say not to thee, till seven times, but till seventy times seven times."¹ For the Lord did not change to another number, but multiplying the seven placed the limit of forgiveness at that. And after seven years the Hebrew used to be freed from slavery.¹ And seven weeks of years they used to make in former time the celebrated jubilee, in which the land kept the sabbath, and there occurred cancelling of debts, release from slavery, and as it were a new life was again established, the old life in a manner receiving its completion in the number seven.² And these are the types of models of this present age,³ which revolves in cycles of seven days as it runs past us; and it is in this age that the expiations of the lesser sins are made, according to the loving care of the good Master, so that we may not be given over for punishment to the age without end. Accordingly, the term "seven times" is used because of the relationship of seven to this world, the idea being that men who are lovers of the world ought especially to be punished on the basis of those things for the sake of which they chose to do wrong. And as for the sins which are being expiated, if you mean the sins committed by Cain, you will find them seven; or if you mean the sentences passed upon him by the Judge, even so you will not miss the sense. Now among the daring deeds done by Cain, the first sin is envy at the preference of Abel; the second, guile, whereby he addressed his brother saying: "Let us go forth into the field"⁴; the third, murder, an added evil; fourth, that it was even fratricide, a greater iniquity; fifth, that Cain was also the first murderer, leaving behind him a bad example for the world; sixth, wrong-doing, because he caused grief to his parents; seventh, because he lied to God, for being asked, "Where is thy brother Abel?" he said, "I know not."¹ Therefore seven expiations were discharged in the destruction of Cain. For when the Lord said: "Cursed is the earth which hath opened and received the blood of thy brother," and "groaning and trembling shalt thou be on the earth," Cain said: "If thou castest me out this day from the earth, and I shall be hidden from thy face, and groaning and trembling shall I lie upon the earth, and everyone that findeth me shall kill me." And in reply to this the Lord said: "No, it shall not be so. Whosoever shall kill Cain shall be punished sevenfold."² For since Cain thought that he was an easy prey for everyone, on account of having no safety upon earth (for the earth was cursed because of him), and on account of being deprived of God's help, since He was angry at him for the murder, thinking that no assistance was left him either from earth or from heaven he said. "It shall come to pass that everyone that findeth me shall kill me." Scripture proves his error by saying: "Not so," that is, you shall not be destroyed. For death is a gain to those who are being chastised, since it brings relief from their pains. But you shall be continued in life, that your chastisements may be measured in proportion to your sins. But since the word “ἐκδικούμενον” is understood in a twofold sense, not only as the sin for which the expiation is made, but also the manner of the chastisement whereby the expiation takes place, let us see whether seven manners of punitive suffering were inflicted upon the culprit.

Now the seven sins of Cain have been enumerated by Scripture in the sequel. And we next ask whether the consequences visited upon him as chastisement were seven, and we answer as follows: After the Lord's question: “Where is thy brother Abel?”—the Lord not wishing to get this information but offering Cain an opportunity for repentance—the kind Master led him on, as His very words show. For when Cain denied any knowledge thereof,¹ He quickly convicted him, saying: “The voice of thy brother's blood crieth to me.”² Thus the question: “Where is thy brother Abel?” gave Cain an opportunity for realizing his sin; it was not a means of furnishing information to God. For if Cain had not received a visitation from God, he would have had as a pretext that he had been abandoned and had received no opportunity for repentance. But now the Healer appeared to him, that he who was sick might take refuge with Him. But Cain not only does not conceal his ulcer, but contrives still another, adding falsehood to murder. “I know not. Am I my brother's keeper?” From now on, count the punishments. “Cursed is the earth for thy sake.”³ One chastisement. “Till the earth.” This is the second. For some secret necessity was laid as a yoke upon him, forcing him to work the earth, so that not even when he wished it was it possible for him to rest, but ever was he compelled to submit to hardships by the hostile earth, which he himself had rendered accursed to himself by polluting it with a brother's blood. Hence, "Thou shalt till the earth"—a terrible punishment, living with those that hate thee, to have as a housemate an enemy, an implacable foe "Thou shalt till the earth"; that is, straining at his labours in tilling the fields, thou shalt relax at no time, being released from thy labours neither day nor night but being subject to that secret necessity that, severer than any bitter master, urged thee on to work. "And she shall not yield unto thee her strength." And yet, if his unending toil did have any fruitage, the labour itself was no moderate punishment for one who always strained and toiled to weariness. But since not only is his labour unending, but also his heavy toil with the earth is unfruitful (for "she did not yield her strength"), this is the third punishment, the fruitlessness of his toils. "Groaning and trembling shalt thou be upon the earth."¹ He has added two to the other three—continual groaning, and trembling of the body, since his limbs had not the support that comes from strength. For since he had used the power of his body wickedly, his vigour was taken away, so that he tottered and shook, being unable easily either to bring bread to the mouth or to fetch water to it, his wicked hand not being permitted after the unholy deed even to administer to the private and necessary needs of the body. Another punishment is that which Cain himself disclosed when he said. "If thou dost cast me out from the earth, I shall be hidden also from thy face." What is "If thou dost cast me out from the earth"? That is, if thou dost deprive me of the benefit that comes from it. For he was not transferred to another place, but he was estranged from the blessings that come from the earth. "I shall be hidden also from thy face." The severest chastisement, in the sight of right-minded men, is separation from God. "And it shall come to pass," he says, "that everyone that findeth me shall kill me." He conjectures this as a consequence of the preceding punishments. If I have been cast out in the earth, if I shall be hidden from thy face, it remains for me to be destroyed by everyone. What then does the Lord say? "No, it shall not be so." But he put a sign upon him. This is the seventh punishment: that his punishment was not even concealed, but that by a conspicuous sign it was proclaimed to all that this man was the contriver of unholy deeds. For, to one who reasons rightly, the severest of chastisements is shame—a shame of which we have also learned regarding the judgment that "Some shall rise to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."¹

slain a man to the wounding of myself, and a stripling to my own bruising: if sevenfold vengeance has been taken for Cain, yet for Lamech seventy times sevenfold." And some think that Cain was destroyed by Lamech, on the ground that he lived until that generation that he might pay a more protracted punishment. But it is not true. For Lamech seems to have committed two murders, to judge by what he himself relates "I have slain a man and a stripling, a man to my wounding, and a stripling to my bruising."¹ Now a wound is one thing, and a bruise another. And a man is one thing, and a stripling another "For Cain sevenfold vengeance shall be taken, but for Lamech seventy times sevenfold." It is just that I undergo four hundred and ninety punishments, if indeed God's judgment is just in the case of Cain, that he undergo seven chastisements. For, just as he did not learn to commit murder from another, so he never saw a murderer enduring punishment, either; but I, though I had before my eyes the culprit groaning and trembling and the magnitude of God's wrath, was not chastened by the example. Wherefore I deserve to pay four hundred and ninety chastisements.

But some persons have arrived at the following notion, which is not out of harmony with the teaching of the Church: that from Cain unto the Deluge seven generations passed by, and the punishment was brought upon the whole earth, because the spread of sin had become great. But the sin of Lamech does not require a deluge for its cure, but Him who taketh away the sin of the world.² Therefore count the generations from Adam to the coming of Christ, and you will find, according to the genealogy of Luke,¹ that in the seventy-seventh succession the Lord was born.

These matters, then, have been examined according to my ability, although many points that might have been examined have been passed over, lest we prolong the discussion beyond the measure of the letter; but sufficient for your intelligence are even the little seeds. For it is said: "Give occasion to a wise man, and wisdom shall be added unto him,"² and, "If a skilful man hear a wise word, he shall praise it, and will apply it to himself"³

But as for the words of Simeon to Mary, they contain nothing complicated or profound: for "Simeon blessed them, and said to Mary His mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and for the rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be contradicted; and thy own soul a sword shall pierce, that out of many hearts, thoughts may be revealed"⁴ Herein one thing caused me to wonder—how, after passing over what goes before as being clear, you came to ask about this alone: "Thy own soul a sword shall pierce" And yet to me the question how the same child "is set for the fall and rising again," and what the "sign which shall be contradicted" is, seems no less difficult than the third, how "a sword shall pierce Mary's soul."

Now I believe that the Lord is for the fall and the rising again, not because some fall and others rise again, but because the worse in us falls and the better rises again. For the coming of the Lord is destructive of bodily passions, but stimulative of the special qualities of the soul. Just as when Paul¹ says: "When I am weak, then am I powerful," the same man is both weak and strong, but though he is weak in the flesh, yet he is strong in the spirit. Thus also the Lord does not furnish to some opportunities of falling and to others of rising. For those who fall, fall down from the station in which they once were. But it is clear that the faithless man never has stood, since he always crawls on the ground with the serpent, whom he follows. He has not, therefore, a position from which he may fall, because of his having already fallen through lack of faith. Therefore the first benefit is that he who stands falls through sin and dies, then lives through righteousness and rises, faith in Christ granting to us both blessings. Let the worse fall that the better may seize an opportunity to rise. If fornication does not fall, chastity does not rise. If the irrational is not crushed, the rational in us will not flourish. In this sense, then, is He "for the fall and the resurrection of many."

But concerning "For a sign that shall be contradicted": we know that in Scripture the cross is regularly called a "sign." For it says that Moses set the serpent "upon a sign,"² that is, upon a cross. Or a sign is a thing that is explanatory of something unusual and obscure, which is seen by the simpler folk but is understood by those who are subtle of understanding. Since, then, men do not cease contending about the incarnation of our Lord, some concluding that He had assumed a body, while others maintain that His advent was without body, and some holding that He had taken on a body capable of sensations, while others held that He fulfilled through a sort of phantasy the functions which the body performs; and some say that His body was earthly, but others that it was heavenly; and some claim that His beginning was from eternity, but others that He had His beginning from Mary. On this account He is "For a sign that shall be contradicted."¹

And by "a sword" Scripture means the word that puts to the trial, that discerns our thoughts, that reaches even to the division of the soul and spirit, of the joints also and the marrow, and is a discerner of our thoughts.² Since, then, every soul at the time of the Passion was subjected to a kind of discerning judgment, as it were, according to the words of the Lord³ who said "All you shall be scandalized in me," Simeon proceeds to prophesy also about Mary herself, how that as she stands near the cross,⁴ and beholds what takes place, and hears the voices, after the witness of Gabriel,⁵ after her secret knowledge of the divine conception,⁶ after the great display of wonders, "there shall be," he says, "a tempest even

That is the sword. “That out of many hearts thoughts may be revealed” intimates that, after the scandal that happened on the cross of Christ both to the disciples and to Mary herself, there shall come a swift healing from the Lord, confirming their hearts in faith in Him. For thus we saw that Peter also, after suffering his scandal, clung more firmly to his faith in Christ. So the human in him was proven unsound, that the strength of the Lord might be manifested.

in Christ;¹ that which had fallen apart would not have been put together again; that which had been thrown down and broken would not have been set aright again; that which was alienated by the serpent's deceit would not have been joined to God. For all these things are destroyed by those who say that the Lord had a heavenly body² when He was present. And what need was there of the Holy Virgin, if the God-bearing flesh was not to be assumed from the material from which Adam was moulded? But who is so bold as now to renew once more, through sophistic phrases and from what they pretend is the testimony of the Scriptures, that teaching³ of Valentinus⁴ which has long been hushed in silence? For not very recent is this impiety of the "Seeming,"⁵ nay, long ago did it have its beginning with the empty-minded Valentinus, who, by mangling a few sayings of the apostle, fashioned for himself the impious fabrication, saying that He assumed the ⁵ Docetism, the common doctrine of many Gnostic sects, signified that Christ had no real human body, but had merely assumed an ethereal or phantom body. This doctrine, however, was not held by Valentinus and his followers, who taught that Christ had assumed a body. Each school had a different teaching on this point, but all denied the real Incarnation.

The leader of Gnosticism in Asia Minor was Marcion, a priest of Sinope in Pontus. He had been distinguished for his zeal and asceticism, but having failed in his obligations he was excommunicated. After having been refused re-admission into the Church, he joined a Gnostic sect. He taught an absolute distinction between the God of the Christians and the God of the Jews. He repudiated the Old Testament entire, and of the New Testament he retained only a mutilated copy of the Gospel of St. Luke, the Acts of the Apostles, and ten Epistles of St. Paul.

The sect, which had a complete ecclesiastical organization, continued to the sixth century.

“ form of a servant ”¹ and not the servant himself, and saying that the Lord came “ in likeness.” but that man himself was not taken on by Him. Statements akin to these are apparently being made by the men you mention, and we may fittingly bemoan them for bringing new disturbances upon you.

As for the statement that human feelings pass over to the divine nature itself, it is characteristic of those who never preserve consistency in their thinking and who do not know that feelings of mere flesh are one thing, and of flesh endowed with soul another, and of soul that has made use of a body still another.² Now it is peculiar to flesh that it may be divided and diminished and dissolved; and again to flesh endowed with soul that it may be weary and suffer pain and feel hunger and thirst and be overcome by sleep; and to soul that has made use of a body that it has griefs and anxieties and cares and all such things. Of these some are natural and necessary to the living being, others are brought on by a perverse will through lack of discipline in living and of training in virtue. Therefore it is apparent that while the Lord took upon Himself the natural feelings to the end of establishing the true and not the fantastic or seeming incarnation, yet as concerns the feelings that arise from wickedness, such as besmirch the purity of our lives, these He thrust aside as unworthy of His unsullied divinity. For this reason it has been said that He was "made in the likeness of sinful flesh",¹ for it was not merely in the likeness of flesh, as it seems to these men, but in the likeness of sinful flesh. Thus He assumed our flesh along with its natural feelings, but He "did no sin."² Nay, just as death, that is, death in the flesh, which was transmitted to us through Adam, was swallowed up by the divine nature, so too sin was destroyed by the righteousness which is in Christ Jesus, so that we in the resurrection resume the flesh that is neither liable to death nor subject to sin.³

These, brethren, are the mysteries of the Church, these the traditions of the fathers. We bear witness to every man who fears the Lord and awaits God's judgment that he be not carried away by various teachings. If anyone teaches a different doctrine and does not accede to the sound words of the faith, but thrusting aside the oracles of the Spirit makes his own teaching more authoritative than the lessons of the Gospel, beware of such a man.

But may the Lord grant that some day we may meet one another, so that whatever has escaped our discussion we may supply through conversation face to face. For we have written to you but a few things out of many, not wishing to go beyond the measure

You have done well in writing to us, for you have exhibited the fruit of charity in no small degree; and do you continue to do this. Do not, however, think that you need apologize whenever you write to us. For we understand ourselves and realize that to every man belongs by nature equality of like honour with all men, and that superiorities in us are not according to family, nor according to excess of wealth, nor according to the body's constitution, but according to the superiority of our fear of God.² Therefore what is there to prevent you, who fear the Master more, from being greater than us on this very ground? So write to us continually, and inform us how the brethren about you are, and who of your church are sound, that we may know to whom we should write and in whom we may rest content. But since I hear that there are some falsifying the correct teaching about the incarnation of the Lord by distorted assumptions, I urge them through your

¹ Written in 377. The Urbicius, to whom this letter is addressed, is evidently the same person to whom Basil wrote Letter CXXIII in the year 373. Cf. also Letter CCCLXVI. Nothing more is known of him. From the last sentence of the present letter it is concluded that Urbicius must have been the superior of a monastery or an ecclesiastic of some rank. The heresy referred to here is the Apollinarian.

LETTER CCLXII

Charity to refrain from that absurd view which some are reported to us as holding—that God Himself was turned into flesh, and did not assume through the Holy Mary the stuff from which Adam was moulded, but that He Himself through His own divinity was transformed into the material nature

But this absurd opinion is very easy to refute. Yet since the blasphemy is manifest at a glance, I think that for one who fears the Lord even the mere reminder is enough. For if He was “turned,” He was also changed. But far be it from me either to say this or to think it, since God¹ has said: “I am, and I change not.” Besides, how did the benefit of the incarnation pass to us, unless our body, united with the divinity, became superior to the domination of death? For if He had been turned, He could not have kept the substance of His own body, and just that still subsisted when His divine nature had become gross. And how could the divinity that is without bounds have been circumscribed within the bulk of a small body, even if it were true that the entire nature of the Only-begotten was “turned”?

But I believe that no one who has sense and possesses the fear of God suffers from this weakness. But since the report came to me that some of those who live with your Charity are within the grasp of this mental weakness, I thought that our letter ought not merely to carry a bare greeting, but ought to contain some such matter as might also strengthen the souls of those who fear the Lord. Accordingly we urge this—that you obtain ecclesiastical correction

The good-will, furthermore, of the West is attested by the following fragment of the Synod at Rome: "Caeterum, quod ad removendas vestrae dilectionis iniurias, nec frater noster

TO THE WESTERNERS ¹

MAY our Lord God, in whom we have placed our hope, grant to each of you such grace to obtain the hope that is set before us, according to the measure of the gladness with which you yourselves have filled our hearts, both by the letter that you have written to us through our most beloved fellow-presbyters,² and by the sympathy that you have felt for the misfortunes which prevail among us, for you have put on bowels of mercy,³ as the afore-mentioned have

Dorotheus presbyter explicare omnia vivaciter praeimitit, nec nostri misus, ut ipse testis est, defuereut."

The question addressed by Meletius to his see of Antioch was also discussed by the legates in the presence of Pope Damasus and Peter of Alexandria. The latter, however, numbered Meletius among the heretics. This so angered Dorotheus that he gave vent to his ire immediately. Cf. Letter CCLXVI.

Again the West promised aid, this time deciding to send legates. Cf. Letter of the Council of Aquileia to the Emperors. But the plan was interfered with by the Gothic War. Cf. Vita S. Basilii, 36 1 and 2. Cf. also Letter CXX, especially note 1, p. 246.

The Benedictine Editors place the date of this second embassy in the spring of 377, Loofs in the summer of 377.

For even if our wounds do continue the same, yet it brings us some solace to have physicians at hand who are able, if they should get an opportunity, to apply a swift cure to our pains. Therefore once again,¹ through our beloved ones we both salute you and urge you, if the Lord grants you an opportunity of coming to us, not to hesitate to visit us. Now the reckless and impudent heresy of the Arians, being plainly cut off from the body of the Church, remains in its own error, and harms us but little because their impiety is evident to all. ourselves, easily inflict injury on the simpler folk, these are they who are harmful and difficult to guard against. It is these men that we would have made known publicly by your Integrity to all the churches in the East, in order that either, mending their ways, they may be truly with us, or, remaining in their perversity, they may keep their harm to themselves alone, not being able through an unguarded communion to share their own disease with their neighbours. And we must mention these by name, in order that you also may know who they are that cause disturbances among us; and do you make the matter clear to our churches. For statements made by us are suspected by the many, on the ground that we perhaps through certain personal quarrels hold ill-will towards them. But as for you, inasmuch as you happen to live far away from them, so much the greater is the confidence you enjoy in the eyes of the laity, in addition to the fact that God's grace co-operates with you in the care of those who labour. And if, besides, a considerable number of you together declare the same doctrines with one voice, it is clear that the multitude of those who have so declared will bring about for all the acceptance of the doctrine without contradiction.

Now one of those who causes us much sorrow is Eustathius,¹ of Sebaste in Lesser Armenia, who, taught of old by Arius at the time when Arius flourished at Alexandria, as the author of those wicked blasphemies against the Only-begotten, following him and being numbered among his most faithful disciples, on returning to his own country, gave a confession of sound faith to the most blessed bishop Hermogenes of Caesarea, who was judging him on the charge of false doctrine. And having thus received ordination at his hands, after the decease of the latter, he ran to Eusebius of Constantinople, a man who himself less than no one sponsored the impious doctrine of Arius. Then after being driven for some cause or other from that place, he returned and made a defence again before the people of his own country, concealing his impious sentiments and screening himself behind a kind of orthodoxy of words. And when he somehow obtained the bishopric, he seems immediately to have written an anathema of consubstantiation at their¹ synod convened at Ancyra². And going thence into Seleucia, in conjunction with those who held the same opinions as himself, he did what all know³. And at Constantinople he again agreed with the proposals of the heretics. And when he had accordingly been expelled from his episcopacy on account of his former deposition at Mehtine,⁴ he conceived of the visit to you as a means of restoring himself. bishop Liberius,¹ and what it was that he himself agreed to, we know not, except that he brought back a letter restoring him, by displaying which at the synod of Tyana he was restored to his place. This man now tries to destroy that creed on the basis of which he was received, and he associates with those who anathematize consubstantiation, and is the leader of the heresy of the pneumatomachi.² Since, then, his power to harm the churches came from your quarter, and since he has used the privilege granted him by you for the downfall of the many, from you must come also his correction, and you should write to the churches what the conditions are on which he was received, and how now, having undergone a change, he nullifies the favour that was granted to him by the fathers of that time.

Second to him is Apollinarius, who also is troubling the churches in no small degree. For since by his facility in writing he has a tongue that suffices him for every subject, he has filled the world with his books, disregarding the charge of him who said: "Avoid making many books";³ and in the multitude of them he has clearly sinned much. writings, which are constructed, not out of Scriptural proofs, but out of human arguments, but there are also his writings about the resurrection, composed in the manner of myths, or rather in the manner of the Jews, wherein he tells us to return again to the worship which is according to the law, and again to be circumcised, and to observe the Sabbath,¹ and to abstain from meat, and to offer sacrifices to God, and to worship in the temple at Jerusalem, and in general to become Jews instead of Christians. What could be more ridiculous, or rather more foreign to the teaching of the Gospel, than these things? Then too his statements about the incarnation have caused such confusion among the brethren that now few of such as have read them preserve the ancient character of the true religion; and as for the many, they, being intent on innovations, have been turned aside to inquiries and contentious investigations of these unprofitable words.

As to Paulinus, however, whether there is anything reprehensible about his ordination you yourself could say; but us he grieves by being inclined toward the teachings of Marcellus,² and by admitting his followers indiscriminately into communion with himself. And you know, most honoured brethren, that the doctrine of Marcellus contains the destruction of all our hope, neither confessing the Son in His proper faith against the Arians, in refuting the heterodox writings of Asterius, he was accused of falling himself into doctrines combining the errors of Sabellius and Paul of Samosata. Thus he appeared to teach that the Son had no real personality, but was merely the external manifestation of the Father, being called the Son of God, viewed as man only

We beg that the care of these matters come from you. And they would be cared for, if you should deign to write to all the churches in the East, that those who make these false assertions, but if they mend their ways, are in communion, but if they contentiously wish to abide in their innovations, are separated from those in communion. And that we ought to determine these matters sitting with your Wisdom in common council together, we ourselves are also not unaware; but since the occasion does not permit, and delay is harmful, the harm from them having already taken root, we have of necessity despatched these brethren, in order that whatever has escaped the account contained in our letter, they may inform you of themselves, and thus may stir your Reverences to furnish the desired aid to the churches of God.

LETTER CCLXIV

TO BARSES, BISHOP OF EDESSA, WHILE IN EXILE¹

To one who is truly most beloved of God and worthy of every respect and honour, Bishop Barses, Basil CCLXIV and CCLXVII, should be assigned to the last years of the reign of Valens, perhaps to 377, for in both Basil expresses hope of approaching peace, since the persecution had reached its height. Theodoret, H.E. 4. 16, says that this Barses had fled to the island of Aradus, off the coast of Phoenicia, but moved to the town of Oxyrhynchus in Egypt, because crowds had flocked to him on hearing of his miracles. Finally, he went to a remote spot called Philo.

When an opportunity presented itself, Basil wrote to him to commend himself to his prayers. Barses, however, did not receive this letter, or perhaps did not receive it before he wrote again to Basil to complain of the latter's silence. Accordingly, Basil wrote again, this time entrusting his letter to certain Cappadocians then on their way to Egypt. He also entrusted them with a small gift for the saintly exile

Since our most loyal brethren, Domninus¹ and his party, are going to your Reverence, we have gladly accepted the opportunity for this letter, and we greet you through them, praying to the holy God that we may be preserved in this life until such time as we are deemed worthy to see you and to enjoy the gifts of grace that are in you. Only pray, I urge, that the Lord may not deliver us finally to the enemies of the Cross of Christ,² but may preserve His churches until the time of peace; and the just Judge Himself knows when He will render this to us.³ For He will render it, and He will not forsake us utterly. Nay, just as for the Israelites He appointed a term of seventy⁴ years of captivity as the punishment for their sins, so perhaps the Almighty, having given us also over to an appointed period, will some day call us back and restore us to the peace of old; unless indeed apostasy is somewhere near, and what is now happening is a prelude to the entrance of the Antichrist.⁵

GREAT in all things do we find the good God's administration of His churches, so that even those things which seem to forebode trouble and which do not turn out entirely according to our wishes are being administered for the benefit of the majority, in the incomprehensible wisdom of God and the unsearchable judgments of His justice ² For behold, after the Lord had removed your Charities from the regions of the works of Apollinarius reached them, they could not remain silent about the injury done to the Church and wrote their thoughts on Apollinarius to the monks of Nitra. When Basil learned of their zeal in refuting heresies, he decided to foster communion with them by letter. He accordingly despatched the deacon Elpidius with this and the following letter. Cf. Vita S. Basilii, 37. 3-7.

Nothing is known of this Eulogius more than is mentioned here. The Alexander of this letter is not mentioned elsewhere. Harpocraton was bishop of Bubastus (Basta) in Egypt, one of the bishops consecrated by Melchius. Cf. Athan. Apol. contra Arianos.

Since, then, by the grace of God we have learned of the orthodoxy of your faith, and have learned of your care for the brethren, and that not perfunctorily nor carelessly do you furnish the means which are of common benefit and indispensable to salvation, but that you purpose to give effect to whatever conduces to the edification of the churches, we have considered it right to come into communion with your good company and to join ourselves through this letter with your Reverences. For in truth we have found much distress among all who cling to the peace of the Lord at the manifold innovations of Apollinarius of Laodicea,¹ who has distressed us so much the more in that in the beginning he seemed to be one of us. For while any suffering inflicted by an open enemy, even if it is excessive in painfulness, is somehow endurable to the sufferer, as it is written: "For if my enemy had reviled me, I would verily have borne with it";² to experience injury at the hands of one of like mind and a close friend, this is altogether hard to bear and admits of no consolation. For him whom we expected to have as a fellow-champion of truth,³ this man have we now found among the masses obstructing those who are being saved by leading their minds astray and by drawing them away from right doctrine. For what that is rash and hasty among deeds has not been done by him? And what that is novel and rash among words has not been devised? Has not the whole Church been divided against itself, especially when men are sent by him to the churches governed by the orthodox to tear them asunder and

Are not his sermons about God full of impious teachings, the old impiety of the empty-minded Sabellius being now renewed by him in his books? ⁴ For if the books that the Sebastenes are circulating have not been composed by enemies but are truly his writings, he has left no possibility of surpassing his impiety, for he calls Father and Son and Spirit the same, and commits certain other obscure impieties, which we did not consent even to receive into our ears, praying to have no part with the men who uttered those statements. Has not the doctrine of the incarnation been destroyed by him? Has not our Lord's saving dispensation been made ambiguous to the many because of the turbid and cloudy questions he raises concerning the incarnation? To collect all these and to bring them to refutation there was nothing serious with which to reproach him (Apolinarius) With regard to the Incarnation, he taught as follows Christ had received from humanity a body inspired by a soul, but the human mind had been replaced in Him by the Divine element "

The Sabellians imagined God as a monad who extends Himself in a Trinity. The designations, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, mean three successive manifestations These expansions are temporary; they are caused by the needs of the creature When once this need has ceased, the expansion equally ceases, and the Divinity again draws itself in. They were not agreed upon the subject of the Divine Sonship: some made it consist in the humanity of Christ, others in the blend of Word and humanity, others again said that Word assumes the character of Son at the Incarnation. This Incarnation was transitory, it ceased before the sending of the Holy Spirit

Therefore we exhort you, as skilled physicians and men who have been trained to discipline your opponents in gentleness, to endeavour to lead him back to the good order of the Church, and to persuade him to despise the verbosity of his writings¹ (for he has confirmed the words of the proverb, that "in the multitude of words it is not possible to escape sin"),² and firmly to place before him the teachings of orthodoxy, that his amendment may become manifest and his repentance be made known to the brethren.

And it is wise to remind your Reverences also about the party of Marcellus,³ that you may not the confessors of Egypt. Epiphanius declared that various judgments were passed on him. Paulinus received his disciples without discrimination. Basil (Letter LXIX) complained that he had been received into communion by the Church of Rome.

"Basil's testimony is further strengthened by the fact that during the last years of his life he removed Marcellus from his communion. Moreover, if Athanasius had always been in communion with him, there would have been no need of his disciples' requesting the confessors of Egypt to receive them into communion. Furthermore, Peter, the successor of Athanasius, would not have complained as he did in his reply to Basil (cf. Letter CCLXVI, Basil) of the violation of the canons if Marcellus and his followers had always been in communion.

"Therefore, it can be concluded that Marcellus fell into error towards the end of his life, that he was cut off from communion with Athanasius. Deserted by the entire East, the communion which he had been granted at one time by the Church of Rome could have been of little profit."

But since on account of impious teachings he has left the Church, his followers must not, until after they have anathematized that heresy, become acceptable for our communion, in order that those who join with us through you may be received by all the brethren. For now at least no moderate grief has seized the many, upon hearing that when these men presented themselves to your Honours you both received them and shared ecclesiastical communion with them. And yet you ought to have known that by God's grace you are not alone in the East, but you have many in your party who vindicate the orthodoxy of those fathers who at Nicaea set forth the true doctrine of the faith; and that all in the West are really in accord with you and us; whose document of the faith we have received and keep with us, following its sound teaching. Therefore all ought to have been informed who are in the same communion as you, in order that the action taken may be the more fully confirmed by the assent of the majority, and that the peace may not be broken by the withdrawal of some upon the reception of others. Thus, then, it was fitting that you should have deliberated seriously and quietly about matters that are of concern to all the churches in the world. For not he who has decided a matter hastily is commendable, but he who has regulated every detail firmly and unalterably, so that even in later times his opinion under examination shows itself to be the more

CXXXIII. Peter succeeded Athanasius in May 373. In order to promote the peaceful succession of an orthodox bishop, Athanasius had been requested to recommend one who could be elected by anticipation. He named Peter, whom Gregory of Nazianzus describes as honoured for his wisdom and grey hairs (cf. Orat. 25. 12), who had been a companion of his labours (cf. Theod. 4. 20). Five days afterwards (May 2) Athanasius died.

you about all that happens here, both great and small. For it is fitting both that you should concern yourself with our affairs and that we should report our affairs to your Charity. But be informed, our most honoured and beloved brother, that continuous afflictions, and this great tumult which is now shaking the churches, cause us to be astonished at nothing that takes place. For just as workers in smithies, whose ears are struck with a din, become inured to the noise, so we by the frequency of strange reports have at length become accustomed to keep our heart unmoved and undismayed at unexpected events. Therefore the charges that have from of old been fabricated by the Arians against the Church, although many and great and noised throughout the whole world, can nevertheless be endured by us because they come from open enemies and foes of the word of truth;¹ indeed it is when they do not act in their usual way that we marvel at them, not when they venture some big and insolent thing against the true faith. But it is what is being done by men of like mind and opinion with ourselves that grieves and disturbs us.² But yet even these actions, because they are numerous and come continually to our ears, do not seem surprising. For this reason we were neither disturbed at the disorders that happened lately, nor did we vex your ears with the news, partly because we realized that rumour would also automatically convey to you the news of all that had happened; and partly because we were waiting for others to be the messengers of painful tidings; and, also, because we did not consider it reasonable that you should be annoyed at such things, as though chagrined because you had been slighted. But to the men, who themselves committed these acts, we did write what was fitting, urging them, since the brethren there have experienced some dissension, not to stand aloof from charity, but to await correction from those who are empowered to remedy errors in the ecclesiastical way.¹ And since you, moved by a noble and befitting motive, have acted thus, we have commended you, and we have given thanks to the Lord, that a remnant of the ancient good discipline is being preserved in you and that the Church has not lost her strength in our persecution. For the canons have not also been persecuted along with us. So, though I have been importuned many times by the Galatians, I have never been able to answer them, since I awaited your decisions.² And now, if the Lord grants it, and they are willing to bear with us, we hope to bring the laity back to the Church, that we ourselves may not be reproached with having gone over to the Marcellians, but that they may become members of the body of the Church of Christ,³ so that the evil reproach which has been scattered upon them from the heresy may be made to disappear by our taking them back, and that we may not be put to shame as having gone over to them.

¹ When Dorotheus was defending the cause of Meletius before Pope Damasus and Peter, bishop of Alexandria, Meletius together with Eusebius were numbered among the heretics by these prelates. Dorotheus could not endure the charge, and vented his wrath on Peter. Cf Vita S. Basilii 37 2. In 360 the see of Antioch was vacant. The choice fell upon Meletius, an unattached bishop. He belonged to Melitine in Armenia Minor. A council held in that city in 358 had deposed Eustathius, the bishop of Sebaste. Meletius agreed to replace Eustathius, but the people of Sebaste refused to gently and calmly to your Decorum.¹ And this I attribute to the difficulty of the times. For we seem to have prospered in nothing on account of our sins, if indeed the most zealous of the brethren are not found gentle, and not even fitted for their missions through failing to carry out all their duties according to our wishes. He on his return related to us the conversations that he had with your Honour in the presence of the most honoured bishop Damasus, and he grieved us when he said that our most God-beloved brothers and fellow-workers, Meletius and Eusebius, were numbered among the Ariomaniacs.² But concerning them, even if there was nothing else to establish their orthodoxy, the hostility of the Arians at least affords no slight proof of their sound faith to those who consider the matter fairly. Also, their participation with you in suffering for Christ's sake ought to join your Reverences to them in charity. And be convinced of this, truly most honoured sir, that there is no statement of orthodoxy which has not been proclaimed in all frankness by these men with God as their witness and us as having heard them. Nor would we have accepted their union early, if we had found them accept him. Meletius thereupon retired to Berea in Syria. Meletius is claimed by some to have signed the Acacian formula—the then official formula of the Imperial Government. However, in the discourse pronounced by him on his accession to the see of Antioch, he allowed it to be seen that he was no Acacian, but at bottom a Nicene. At the end of the month he was exiled. He was recalled, only to be driven out a second time in 365 (?), and a third time in 370.

² The Benedictine note shows that this charge was outrageous, and points out with what delicacy Basil approaches it, without directly charging Petrus, from whom it must have come, with the slander involved.

Tillemont places this letter at the end of 377 or the beginning of 378. The Benedictine editors, on the evidence of Ammianus 31.6, assign the letter to the summer of 377. It was at that time that many, unable to bear the heavy burdens of taxation, joined with the invading Goths. Valens, upon hearing of this, sent troops to Antioch and vicinity. This seems to be the army of which Basil speaks. Cf. Vita S. Basilii, 38. Loofs also places this letter in the summer of 377.

will preserve you in life until He grants the boon to those who importune Him therefor night and day.

Now as to all that had been done against you up to the arrival of our beloved brother and fellow-deacon, Libanius,¹ we have been informed sufficiently by him as he travelled, but we want to learn what happened after that time. For we hear that in the meantime calamities greater and more difficult to bear have taken place in your region;² and of these, we would learn quickly, if it is possible, but if that is not possible, we would at least learn through our most revered brother and fellow-priester Paul³ on his return, for we pray that your life is being preserved unhurt and unharmed. But because we have heard that the road is all the way infested with robbers and deserters,⁴ we have been afraid to place anything in this brother's hands, lest we become in part responsible for his death.⁵ But if the Lord grant a moderate calm—for we hear of the arrival of the army—we shall endeavour to send some one of our men to visit you and to report to us everything about you.

¹ Nothing more is known of this Libanius than is here stated. However, he is to be distinguished from Libanius the bishop of Letter XCII, and from Libanius the professor of rhetoric, Letter CCCXXXV ff.

³ Nothing further is known of this Paulus than is here stated.

⁴ Note the curious Latinism δησεπτόρων for Greek αὐτομόλων. Eusebius was an exile in Thrace, where the Goths were now closing round Valens.

TO THE WIFE OF ARINTHAEUS, THE GENERAL.
IN CONSOLATION ¹

IT were appropriate and due to your condition that we should be present in person and share in that which is happening to you. For thus we should not only have assuaged our own grief but also have fulfilled for your Decorum the duty of consolation in reasonable measure. But since my body no longer withstands the longer journeyings, we have had recourse to converse by letter, that we may not seem to be entirely indifferent to what has happened.

Who, then, has not bemoaned that man? And who is so stony of heart as not to have shed a warm tear over him? But as for me, I have been exceedingly filled with dejection as I reflect upon the special honours shown to me by the man and upon the general protection given by him to the churches of God. But nevertheless we have reflected that, being human and having performed the duties which fall to this life, he has at the proper time been taken again by God who dispenseth our lots. And we urge your wisdom, bearing these things in mind, to be calm over what has happened, and, in so far as you can, to bear the misfortune with moderation.

three officials who attacked the enemy without waiting for the Emperor's order. The first of these officers was Arinthaëus. In the year 363, when Julian was leading his expedition against the Persians, Arinthaëus was commander of the left wing of cavalry. Arinthaëus was also consul in 372. He was present in 378 when the general Trajan rebuked Valens for the persecution of the Catholics. Cf. Letter CLXXIX, which is addressed to Arinthaëus himself, also Theodoret 4. 30.

Nay, time also will suffice to soothe your heart and to give access to reflection; but yet your excessive love for your husband and your kindness towards all is a cause of disquietude to us, lest perchance you may give yourself over completely to your suffering, since through the simplicity of your character you have received deeply the blow of your sorrow. Now on all occasions the teaching of the Scriptures is helpful, but especially on such as these. Remember, therefore, the declaration of Him who created us, according to which all of us who are of the dust shall return again to the dust; and no one is so great as to show himself superior to the dissolution.¹

Now that admirable man was noble and great, matching the strength of his body with the virtue of his soul—I also affirm it—nay, he was a man who could not be surpassed in either respect; at the same time, however, he was human and he has died, just as Adam died, and Abel, and Noah, and Abraham, and Moses, and anyone whom you might mention of those who have shared our common natures.² Let us, then, now that we have been deprived of him, not be grieved, but for the fact that we have lived with him at all let us be grateful to Him who yoked you with him. For to be deprived of a husband is a lot which you have in common with the rest of women, but such has been your marriage that no other woman, methinks, can cherish equal pride. For He who created us fashioned that man as in

Wherefore the many could neither credit the report which circulated that sad announcement, nor accept at all that Arinthaëus was dead. But nevertheless he has experienced that which will happen to heaven and sun and earth.¹

He has gone, having come to the end brilliantly, not bent by old age, not deprived of any of his distinction, great in the present life and great in the life to come; having lost none of his present brilliancy in view of the glory that is expected, because he had washed away every stain on his soul at his very departure from life by the laver of regeneration.² That you have yourself been his assistant and helpmate in all these things furnishes the greatest consolation. Transfer also your mind from things present to solicitude for the things to come, so that you may be deemed worthy by your good works to receive a place of repose equal to his. WITHOUT ADDRESS, CONCERNING RAPE²

I AM greatly grieved that I do not find you either indignant over deeds which are forbidden or able to understand that this rape which is going on is an unlawful outrage and a tyranny against life itself and the existence of man, and an insult to free men. For I know that if you all had such an opinion, nothing would have prevented this wicked custom from being driven long ago out of our country. Therefore assume in the present instance the zeal of a Christian, and be moved in a manner worthy of the injustice. And as for the girl, wherever you find her, take her by all force and restore her to her parents; and as for the man, debar him from the prayers, and declare him excommunicated; and as for those who accompanied the man, according to the canon³ already published by us, debar them with their whole household from the prayers for a period of three years. And as for the village that received

TO MY COMRADE EUSEBIUS,¹ IN RECOMMENDATION OF CYRIACUS ² THE PRESBYTER

HAVING visited the city immediately on the heels of your departure, why need I describe how disappointed I was at missing you, to a man who needs not words but knows by experience through having suffered similarly ? For how much would it have been worth to me to see the most excellent Eusebius, and to embrace him, and to return again in memory to our youth, and to recall those days when one home was ours, and one hearth, and the same teacher, and leisure, and study, and indulgence, and want, when all that we possessed was shared equally with each other ! Of how much worth do you think I consider it to renew all these things in memory through meeting you, and, casting aside this burdensome old age, to fancy that I have become and room-mate of Basil at Athens. Nothing more is known of him than is contained in this letter.

² The Benedictine editors decline to identify this Cyriacus with the one mentioned in Letter CLXXXVIII. There seems, however, to be nothing improbable in the identification of the two young again instead of old? But though the enjoyment of all this has escaped me, yet of the privilege of seeing your Excellency through the agency of a letter, and of consoling myself by the only method within my power, I have not been deprived, thanks to meeting with the most reverend Cyriacus, fellow-presbyter, whom I am ashamed to recommend to you and to make your own through my offices, lest perchance I seem to be performing a superfluous task in bringing to you what is already your own and a prized possession. But since I must also be a witness of the truth,¹ and to those who are joined with me spiritually give the greatest boons in my possession, while I believe that the man's blamelessness in the priesthood is evident to you also, yet I confirm it, knowing of no calumny against him on the part of those who lay their hands upon everyone, even those who do not fear the Lord. And yet if any accusation had been made against him by them, even so the man would not be unworthy. But the enemies of the Lord rather confirm the churchly standing of those whom they attack than take away from them any of the grace which is theirs as a gift from the Spirit. But still, as I have said, nothing has been devised against the man. Therefore, as being a blameless presbyter and as one who is in union with us and worthy of all respect, so deign to look upon him, thereby both benefiting yourself and conferring a favour upon us.

TO SOPHRONIUS, THE MASTER¹

THE deacon Actiacus² has reported to me that certain persons have caused you to be angry at us, slandering us on the ground that we are not well disposed toward your August self. But I am not surprised if there are some flatterers in attendance upon a man of your high position. For somehow, as by a law of nature, such servile and obsequious courtiers spring up beside men of exalted positions, and these men, because of their lack of any good in themselves whereby they may become known, make use of the evils of others in order to recommend themselves. And we may almost say that just as mildew is destructive of grain when it gets into the grain itself, so flattery when it works its way into friendship is a blight upon the friendship.³ Therefore I am not surprised, as I said, if some persons, like drones around bee-hives, likewise buzz around your splendid and wonderful hearth.

But this has appeared to me annoying and altogether astounding—that you, a man especially distinguished for depth of character, should have brought yourself to lend both ears to them and to accept any slander against me, who, although I have loved many from early youth to this old age of mine, know that I have preferred no one in friendship to your Perfection. For even if my reason had not persuaded me to love you for what you are, our intimacy from boyhood would be enough to attach me to your soul. And you know how powerful is the force of habit in friendship. But if I show you nothing worthy of this affection, pardon my weakness. For not even you yourself will seek a deed from me in proof of my good-will, but surely only an affection which prays that the best things may be yours. For may your fortunes never come to such a pass that they require a benefaction from persons so insignificant as I myself am.

How, then, was I likely to say or do anything in opposition to you in the affair of Memnonius?¹ For this is what the deacon reported to me. And how could I have considered the wealth of Hymetius,² a man so prodigal of his substance, as preferable to your friendship? Nay, none of these charges is true; nor has anything been either said or done by me against you. But here perhaps is a matter which gave occasion to those who utter the lies—a statement I made to certain persons who were raising an outcry: “If the fellow has publicly given orders to carry his purpose into effect, whether you raise an outcry or not, what he seeks will surely be done, though you speak or though you are silent, none the less. But in the possibility that he will change his mind, do not drag in our friend’s most revered name, and do not under the alleged pretext of zeal in your

And you ought not to distrust these statements, unless you regard me as utterly desperate and think that I condemn the great sin of falsehood. Nay, do you of yourself entirely remove from us your suspicion in this matter, and for the future consider my affection for you superior to all slander, imitating Alexander,² who, upon receiving a letter against his physician charging him with plotting against him, since at the very moment he happened to have taken some medicine to drink, was so far from putting faith in the slanderer that he both read the letter and drank the medicine at the same time. For I think it right to account myself less honourable than no man of those who are renowned for friendship, both because I have never been found sinning against friendship, and, again, because I have received storm of protest Their protest was made in the guise of desire to serve the interests of their “patron,” who seems to have been the addressee of this letter, Sophronius. But Basil, in his endeavour to restrain them, intimates that their object was really to advance their own interests by threatening the author of the objectionable orders, and urges them not to drag in his “friend’s” name, i.e. apparently that of Sophronius. A misleading report of Basil’s words reached Sophronius and caused resentment against Basil. In some connection Sophronius has also supposed that Basil influenced some person, perhaps Hymetius, regarding a will, and this will may have been involved in the incident which Basil here explains.

TO THE ELDER HARMATIUS ²

THE common law of all men makes those who are advanced in years common fathers, and the special law of us Christians places us old men in the place of parents to the men of your years. So do not consider me a busybody or that I meddle unnecessarily, if I come to you as advocate of your own son. Now while we deem it right that you should demand his obedience in other respects—for he is responsible to you as to his body both by the law of nature and by this civil law according to which we are governed—yet as to his soul, since he brought it with him from a diviner source, we should consider it to be subject to another, and that there are due from it to God debts that have a priority over all.

² Written towards the end of Basil's life. Our knowledge of the two Harmatū is restricted to this letter. The elder Harmatius is a pagan, but his son has become a Christian. Basil pleads with the father not to interfere with the son's choice of "the life of virtue," and at the same time intimates that the father's fellow citizens would welcome his conversion also.

Since, then, he has preferred the God of us Christians, the true God, to the gods of your people, many in number and worshipped through material symbols, do not become angry at him but rather admire his nobility of soul, in that he has placed above fear and subservience to his father the uniting of himself with God through the true knowledge and the life which is according to virtue. Now both nature itself and the mildness in all things and gentleness of your character will importune you not to allow yourself even to a slight degree the feeling of resentment towards him; and assuredly you will not disregard our petition, either, or rather the petition of your city that is being fulfilled through us, whose citizens, moved by their love for you and by their prayers that all good things may be yours, think that they have received you yourself also as a Christian. me that, if I were not burdened with old age, and held fast by my wonted infirmity, and fettered by the countless cares of the Church, nothing would have prevented me from visiting you in person. For truly it is no small gain for a man, giving up a great house and an illustrious family and changing over to the life of the Gospel, to bridle his youth deliberately while making the passions of the flesh subservient to reason, and to practise the humility that befits a Christian, reflecting concerning himself on such questions as he naturally will—whence he arose and whither he is going¹ For such reflection upon our nature checks the burning heat of the soul, and banishes all boastfulness and arrogance, and—the essential thing—makes the man a disciple of the Lord, who said: “Learn of me, because I am meek and humble of heart”² For truly, dearest son, it is only our lasting good that is to be striven for and approved. And this is the honour which comes from God.

But these human things of ours are more faint and obscure than a shadow and more deceitful than a dream. For youth falls away more quickly than the flowers of spring, and the body’s beauty is wasted by either sickness or time.³ Riches are also untrustworthy, and glory is very fickle. since I have failed of both, I have had recourse to writing in order that you may deign to visit me, at the same time both doing what is proper—a young man paying a visit to an old man—and likewise through the meeting receiving some advice from us on account of your having trouble with certain people of Caesarea, an affair that requires our mediation for its correction. If, then, it is not burdensome, do not hesitate to visit us

LETTER CCLXXIX

TO THE PREFECT MODESTUS ¹

ALTHOUGH those who convey letters from us to your Honour are numerous, yet on account of the great honour in which you hold us I think that the multitude of letters causes your Magnanimity no annoyance. For this reason I have eagerly given this letter to the present brother, knowing that he on his part will receive all that he seeks and that we shall be accounted with you among your benefactors because we procure for your good-will occasions for well-doing.

Now as to the matter with reference to which he needs your protection he himself will tell it to you, if you deign to look upon him with a kindly eye and give him courage to speak out in the presence of your great and exalted authority; but we on our part declare by letter that whatever gain accrues to him we regard as our own, for the reason, especially,

WE hope to find a fitting day for the synod after those which are to be fixed by us for the mountainous country.⁵ But another opportunity for our meeting, apart from the services during the synod, does not present itself, unless the Lord makes some arrangement beyond our expectations. And you ought to guess this from your own experiences. For if such a multitude of anxieties envelops your Nobility in the care of one household, how many duties do you think occupy us on every day?

TO A CENSITOR, REGARDING MONKS¹

I do indeed think that certain regulations are already in force with your Honour regarding monks, so that we should not ask for a special favour in their case, but that it is sufficient for them if they should enjoy the kindness which you show towards all; but nevertheless, thinking it to be incumbent upon me, in so far as I can, to care for such men, I am writing to your perfect Intelligence to relieve from taxation those who have long ago withdrawn from the world, and have mortified their bodies so that neither with money nor with bodily service can they contribute anything useful to the public welfare. He who cares for the Church and has the management of its property in his hands is himself the one who presents you with this letter—our beloved son So-and-so.² Deign to allow him to speak freely about the matters which refer to your Decorum, and also deign to give heed to what he asserts, that at least henceforth the Church may be able to recover itself and be relieved of this many-headed Hydra.³ For such is the property of the monks that we are always seeking someone to take it over, for the Church spends on it more than any profit it receives from these possessions.⁴

² Basil deliberately refrains from putting the bearer's name into writing.

⁴ Men on entering a monastery could dispose of their property either by giving it to the monastery or by giving it to relatives—if they did not see fit to sell the same and distribute the proceeds among the poor. In the first case, the monastery was responsible for all taxes; in the second case it concerned the relatives alone, and neither the monk nor the monastery.

WITHOUT ADDRESS REGARDING AVENGERS²

THE case of this man seems to be a most difficult matter to treat. For we know not how to handle a character so shifty, and, as one can conjecture from what we have seen, so desperate. For when summoned into court he heeds not; and if he attends, he employs such an abundance of words and oaths that we consider it desirable to be rid of him quickly. And I have often seen him even turn the charges upon his accusers. And in short, there is no nature among all the creatures that live on earth so varied and versatile in wickedness as that of this man, since one can judge concerning him after slight experience. But why do you question me, and why do you not persuade yourselves to endure his wrongful deeds as a kind of visitation of God's anger? But that you may not be contaminated by communion with his sins, let him and all his household be debarred from the prayers and from other communion with the clergy. Perhaps when he has become a thing to be shunned³ he will change.

THOSE whom public punishments do not chasten, nor debarment from prayers lead to repentance, must submit to the canons handed down by the Lord. For it is written: "If thy brother shall offend against thee, rebuke him between thee and him; if he will not hear thee, take with thee another; and if even so he will not, then tell the Church; and if he will not hear the Church, let him be to thee thereafter as a heathen, and as the publican."² This, accordingly, has happened in the case of this man. Once he was accused; before one or two witnesses he was convicted; thirdly, before the Church. Since, then, we have protested to him, and he has not accepted, let him henceforth be excommunicated. But when I heard statements of much seriousness, even then I was silent; and now I do not think that it is fitting for me to discuss the same subject. "For I," she says, "had foregone a husband and the bearing of children and the world, that I might obtain this one thing—to be made worthy of God's approval and of a better repute among men,"² when a man, who from boyhood had been trained in the corrupting of homes, on one occasion, employing force with his usual shamelessness, made his way into our home, and up to the point of a bare meeting became an acquaintance of ours, I, both through ignorance of everything concerning him and through a certain misguided sense of respect, being ashamed to drive him out openly; he came to such a pitch of impiety and insolence that he filled the whole city with slanders against me, and posted me with a public placard that was affixed to the doors of the church. And although he incurred some displeasure from the laws³ for this action, he returned again and renewed

And as a result of his most shameful statements, it was not in my power to become known for even the better qualities in which I was conspicuous, because of my having become notorious among all for my incontinent mind."

"Furthermore," she says, "some take delight in slanders, because men by nature rejoice in recriminations;¹ others profess indeed to be indignant, but they have no sympathy; others are convinced that the slanderous abuse is true; others are in doubt, giving heed to the multitude of his oaths. And there is no one who sympathizes with me; but in truth I now realize my loneliness, and I bewail myself that I have no brother, no friend, no relative, no servant bond or free, no one at all to sympathize with me; and, as it seems, I find my single self to be more to be pitied than the whole city, in which there is so great scarcity of men who hate wickedness; they do not realize that the wanton violence committed against their fellows moves in a circle and will one day catch them."

Having related all this to me and things much more astounding with countless tears, she departed, not leaving even me free from her reproaches, on the ground that, when I should have sympathized with her like a father, I was indifferent to so great an evil and philosophized amid the sufferings of others. In view of these words, do you yourself, excellent sir, choose the reply you would have me make to her now, seeing that I have within my power some such decision as this—not to hand over the miscreants to the magistrates, yet neither to attempt to have them discharged if they have already been handed over. For long ago they have been told by the Apostle to fear the magistrate for their evil deeds, saying: “For he beareth not the sword in vain.”² Therefore, just as to hand them over is not kind, so, on the other hand, to have them discharged is the act of one who supports wanton violence. But perhaps there might be a postponement of the case until our arrival; and then we shall show you that we are of no account, since there is no one who gives us obedience.

Thus to me the dearest of all friends is he who conveys to me your letter.

However, regarding the election of men to take charge of districts,¹ if I should do anything by granting favours to men, or by yielding to importunities, or by making concessions to fear, may I never accomplish these things. For not a steward but a huckster shall I be if I barter the gift of God for human friendships. And if the votes that are cast are cast by men who can bring themselves to testify from outside appearances to whatever they may testify, but the selection of the more fit is turned over by our humble self to Him who knows the secrets of the heart, perhaps it is better for everyone, when he has deposited his testimony, to abstain from all canvassing and strife, as though his testimony had been given in behalf of private interests, and to pray to God that the general good may not remain hidden. the result either way, but we shall be grateful to God for what takes place. However, if these things take place by man's agency, they do not take place at all, but we have an imitation, though it falls utterly short of the truth.

And consider that no small danger closes in on him who strives by any and every means to win his purpose, lest some time we draw to ourselves the party of those who sin. For many sins might be committed even by those who would never have been expected to commit them, through the easy-going way of human nature. Then again, while in our private affairs, when we have given advice, and often the best, to our friends, even if we seem to those who are asking our advice to have made out a poor case, we are not angry; but in matters wherein there is no human counsel but God's judgment, if we are not preferred over even God's decisions shall we be indignant? If, then, the decision is given by men, why need we ask ourselves for it instead of having a man take it from himself? But if it is from the Lord, we should pray, but we should not be vexed; and in our prayer we should not ask for our personal desire but should commit the matter to God, who dispenseth what is best. And may the Holy God conduct every experience of sad events away from your home, and mete out to yourself and to all related to you life without sickness and without harm in all prosperity.

TO TIMOTHEUS, THE CHOREPISCOPUS¹

Now to write all that I have in mind I not only regard as neither compatible with the limits of my letter nor in general suitable to that mode of address, but also to pass by in silence is almost impossible for me, since my heart is aflame with righteous indignation against you. So I shall travel a middle course, writing some things, passing over others. For I wish to rebuke you, if it is proper, in the language of a friend and an equal.

If you are that Timotheus whom we have known from childhood as being so intent upon the upright and ascetic life as to be accused of lack of moderation in these matters, are you now, having abandoned the consideration of that which you must by all means do in order to be united with God, looking to what So-and-so thinks of you? and do you keep your life dependent on the opinions of others? and are you taking thought how you may not only not be useless to friends but also not a laughing-stock to enemies, either? and do you fear disgrace in the eyes of many as something dreadful? and do you not understand that, in so far as you waste time in these things, you are, unwittingly, neglecting the higher life? For the divine Scriptures are full of de Lit This Timotheus is probably to be identified with the Timotheus of Letter XXIV

This letter is in the nature of a sermon based on Matt. 6. 19-25, but especially 24. "No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one, and love the other or he will hold to the one, and despise the other. You cannot serve God and Mammon."

admonitions which teach us that it is not granted to excel in both things at the same time—the affairs of this world, and life in God; and Nature herself is also full of examples to this effect. For both in the activity of the mind it is altogether impossible to think two thoughts at the same time, and in the perception of our senses, when two sounds fall on the ears simultaneously, it is impossible to receive and to distinguish them at the same time; and this is so although our two passages for hearing are open. The eyes, likewise, unless both are concentrated upon the same visible object, cannot exercise their function accurately. Now these are illustrations taken from Nature; but to present to you those derived from the Scriptures is no less ridiculous than, as the saying goes, “to bring owls to Athens.”¹

Why, then, do we attempt to mingle things that cannot be mingled—the turmoils of civil life and the exercise of piety, instead of by withdrawing from the turmoils and from having trouble ourselves and causing it to others, and becoming our own masters, thus confirming by deed the aim of the religious life which we long ago set before ourselves, and showing those who wish to calumniate us that it is not within their power to hurt us when they wish? And this will take place as soon as we show ourselves immune from every attack. So much for this. But if we could only meet some day and take more accurate counsel about that which is of benefit to our souls,

LETTER CCXCIII

How are the other affairs of life? Do they proceed according to your wish, as we pray and as is due to your high purpose? For while those whose intentions are prone towards change also, and not unnaturally, lead lives which are unordered, yet those whose minds are fixed, being both ever constant and the same, consequently pass their existence in harmony with their purpose. For in truth it is not within a helmsman's power to make a calm whenever he wishes, but for us it is quite easy to render our lives unruffled, if we but still the disturbances that arise within us from the passions, and if we but set our will above those things that fall upon us from without. For neither losses nor illness nor the other inconveniences of life shall touch the virtuous man, so long as he keeps his mind on God, keeps it moving onward, gazing steadily upon the future, and surmounting easily and dexterously the storms that arise from earth. For those who are held firmly in the grip of the cares of life are like fat birds who have wings to no avail—they are carried along somewhere below along with the cattle.

But as for you, we have been permitted to behold you as strong when harassed by troubles as are swimmers who race with one another in the sea. Moreover, since even from a claw¹ it is possible to recognize the whole lion, from this brief experience that the three letters (XX, XXI, and XXXV) have much in common. The person addressed is, in every case, a learned man, a Christian, and a very close friend of St Basil. Furthermore, the subject-matter of the three letters is the same in this—Basil is most anxious to have the person addressed remember him and write to him more often.

will towards you and the co-operation of God are stored away in your minds, and when these are directed towards the right, then God, called the Co-operator, will be present even though unbidden, and every lover of God likewise, ready of his own accord to give instruction. For unconquerable is the zeal of those who are able to teach something useful, when the souls of those who learn are cleared of every obstruction.

Now not even separation in body is a hindrance, since He who made us in the fullness of His wisdom and kindness did not limit thought by the body, nor power of speech by the tongue, but gave a greater power even from the standpoint of time to those who are able to benefit others, so that they are able to hand on their instruction not alone to those who are a long distance away, but also to very remote later generations. And experience confirms this statement of ours, since those who were born many years ago still teach the youth, their learning being preserved in writing; and we, although so separated from you in body, are always united with you in thought, and converse easily with you, since teaching is not hindered by land or by sea, if you have any concern at all for your own souls.

¹ Very probably the monks of the monastery founded by Basil in the Pontus in 358, with whom, even after his elevation to the archbishopric of Caesarea, he remained in close touch. This letter was written about 370, according to the following hypothesis: In Letter CCXCII Palladius was linked with the monk Palladius of Letters CCLVIII and CCLIX, and with the monk Palladius who addressed a letter to Athanasius about 371 to inform him that a number of the monks of Caesarea had turned against Basil, and to beg him to reprove the unruly brethren. The present letter supplements this idea. The "our most beloved brother" of this letter is probably the

I THINK that, by the grace of God, you need no other exhortation, after the words which we in person addressed to you, when we exhorted you all to accept the community life in imitation of the apostolic manner of living, a proposal which you received as good doctrine and for which you gave thanks to the Lord. Since, then, the things which were spoken by us were not mere words but teachings which were due to pass into deeds for the benefit of you who submissively accepted them, and for the consolation of us who proposed the plan, and to the glory and praise of same Palladius. Thus his life would run as follows. A rich pagan, or more likely an unbaptized Christian, he married a Christian woman and met Basil. A warm friendship arose between them and Palladius was baptized (Letter CCXCII). His wife dying or an agreement having been reached, he joined the religious community in the Pontus, where he was sent "to rouse the lethargy" of the monks and to report to Basil on those of Arian leanings (Letter CCXCV). Dismayed by the advance of Arianism among the monks of the archbishopric, he wrote to Athanasius asking him to counsel the monks to cease from opposing the doctrine of Basil (Athanasius Ep. ad Pallad. P. G. XXVI, 1167). Again later, as an emissary of Basil to monks harassed by heresy, he goes, in company with the Italian monk Innocent, to the Mount of Olives (Letters CCLVII and CCLVIII). Thus the dates of these various letters would be—

LETTER CCXCV

Christ whose name has been invoked upon us, on this account I have despatched our most beloved brother, that he may become acquainted with your zeal and arouse your lethargy, and make clear to us what stands in the way.

For great is our desire both to see you brought together, and to hear concerning you that you do not favour the life that lacks witnesses, but rather that you all consent to be both guardians of each other's diligence and witnesses of each other's success. For thus each one will receive both the perfect reward given on his own account and that given on account of his brother's progress; which reward it is fitting that you should supply to one another by both word and deed through constant intercourse and encouragement. But above all we exhort you to be mindful of the faith of the fathers¹ and not to be shaken by those who try to disturb you in your calm, realizing that neither strictness of life in itself, except it be illumined by faith in God, availeth aught, nor will right confession of faith, if devoid of good works, be able to bring you into the presence of the Lord, but both should go together, that the man of God may be perfect, and our life may not halt on account of the deficiency. For the faith that saves us, as the Apostle says, is that which worketh by charity.

CONJECTURING your own disposition towards us, and recognizing the zeal which you have for the Lord's work, we have made bold with you lately as with a daughter, and have made further use of your mules, using them sparingly indeed, as though our own, but we did for all that prolong the service they rendered me. This, then, had to be written to your august Reverence, that you might know that what has taken place is a proof of my affection.

But at the same time we both remind your Decorum by letter to be mindful of the Lord, and, ever keeping your departure from this world before your eyes, to order your life with reference to your defence before the undecivable Judge, in order that because of your good works you may have confidence before Him who is to reveal the secrets of our hearts in the day of His visitation.

Your most noble daughter we greet through you; and I urge her to pass her time in meditation upon the words of the Lord, so that her soul may be nourished by good doctrine, and that her mind may increase in growth and in stature more than does her body through the action of nature.

² There is no convincing evidence for the date of this letter. It probably was written during the episcopate, since it bears the general tone of one solicitous for his paternal and spiritual (i.e. monastic) estate in the district of Ibora, and far away from his direct observation. saying that those who lay claim to virtue do not with pleasure throw themselves into public offices. For I observe that the experience which is peculiar to physicians is also characteristic of public officers. That is, they see horrible sights, and experience unpleasant things, and from the misfortunes of others they gather griefs of their own—those at least who are truly public officers. Since all men who are engaged in merchandizing, who look to pecuniary gains and are carried away by that kind of glory, consider the greatest of blessings to be the winning of some power by which they will be able to benefit their friends, avenge themselves on their enemies, and to obtain for themselves the things on which they have set their hearts. But you are not such a man. How could you be?—You who voluntarily withdrew from a civil power that was so great, you who, when it was possible for you to rule over a city as though it were a single household, chose the inactive and tranquil life, counting it to be of greater worth neither to have trouble yourself nor to cause trouble to others than others value making themselves disagreeable.

But since the Lord has wished the district of Ibora¹ not to be in the power of hucksters, nor the taking of its census to be like a slave-market, but that each man shall be enrolled in a just manner, accept the task, however irksome, as being at any rate capable of proving conducive to your approval

TO THE FATHER OF A STUDENT WHO HAS DIED,

SINCE the Lord has set us in the second rank of fathers to Christians, having entrusted to us the moulding through religion of the children of those who believe in Him, we have considered the calamity which has befallen your blessed son to be also our own, and we have lamented the untimeliness of his departure, sympathizing very deeply with you, and considering how great will be the burden of grief to his father by nature, when even in us who in accordance with the commandment have been made akin there has been engendered so great a sorrow of heart. For while on his account there of the boy. Basil was ordained deacon in 360, and, because of the importance of the diaconate at this time, he might refer to himself as "constituted father for Christians." The year 360 then would be the date post quem. Probably in 364 Basil was ordained priest, and soon after he was in the midst of the great troubles and problems of the Church and certainly not at leisure to instruct boys. Accordingly 365 would be the date ante quem.

should be naught of sadness in either our feelings or our speech, yet those who have been cheated of their hopes for him arouse our pity. And truly they have a right to many tears and lamentations in that they, having sent forth a son at the very flower of his youth to the pursuit of letters, now receive him back silent in this long and awful silence. But although such thoughts moved us at the first as a human being, and we poured forth hasty tears, and uttered an unaffected groan from the bottom of our heart, when grief suddenly, like a cloud, enveloped our reason, yet when we came to our senses and with the mind's eye looked closely into the nature of man's fortunes, we made apologies to the Lord for the attitude which our soul had recklessly taken towards what had happened, and we admonished ourselves to bear these things temperately, as having by the ancient decree of God been allotted to the life of men.

Gone is a boy at the age when life is best worth living, a lad who was conspicuous in the circles of his fellows, dear to his teachers, able by merely meeting them to draw into friendliness even the most savage of men, keen in his studies, gentle in disposition, sedate beyond his years—though one were to say even more than this he would fall short of the truth¹—but nevertheless he was born man from man. What, then, should be the thoughts of the father of such a son? What else than to recall the fact that his own father died? What wonder, therefore, that he who was born of a mortal became the father of a mortal?

The fact that before his time, and before he had become sated with life, and before he had come into the full measure of his years, and before he had shown himself among the men, he has fallen out of the succession of his race—all this is not an enhancement of the misfortune, as I am convinced, but rather a consolation for what has happened. Thanks should be offered to God's dispensation, that the departed did not leave orphaned children upon earth, that he did not leave behind a widowed wife to be given over to a long affliction or else to live with another man and neglect her former children. But as to the fact that the boy's life was not prolonged in this present world, who is so ignorant that he does not consider this to be the greatest of blessings? For the longer is his stay here below, for more numerous evils is there an occasion. He did no evil; he devised no guile against his neighbour; he came not to the necessity of mingling with the brotherhoods of wrong-doers; he was not involved in the iniquities of the market-place; he did not submit to the compulsion of sins, nor to falsehood, nor to arrogance, nor to avarice, nor to voluptuousness, nor to all those passions of the flesh which are wont to be engendered in dissolute souls; with his soul sullied by no stain has he departed, but in purity has he withdrawn to the better lot. intercourse together a certain feeling of kinship towards your Reverence, and we were so won over by your virtue that at every hour we had you on our tongue, and when we came into intimacy with that blessed soul also, truly we were convinced that the saying of the Proverb¹ was confirmed in you: that woman is joined unto man by God—so congenial were you to one another, each revealing in himself, as in a mirror, the character of the other. Even if one should speak at length he could not attain to a fractional part of her worth.

But how ought we to feel towards a law of God which has prevailed for ages—that he who has come to birth must at the proper time depart again, and that each soul, having rendered unto life the necessary services, must then be set free from the bonds of the body?

We have been neither the first to suffer, admirable Sir, nor we alone; nay, that which parents and grandparents and the earlier members of our race have all experienced, this we too have come to experience. And the present life is full of such examples. And as for you, who so far surpass the rest in virtue, even in the midst of your sufferings you ought to preserve the nobility of your soul unhumbled, not being vexed because of your present loss, but bearing gratitude for the original gift to Him who gave it. For while death is the common lot of all who have shared the same nature, yet to have lived with a good wife has been the lot of only the few who have been accounted blessed in life;

indeed, for a husband to grieve over his separation from his wife is itself no small gift among the gifts of God, to those who look at the matter reasonably; for many have we known who have accepted the dissolution of an incompatible marriage as a relief from a burden.

Gaze upon the heavens yonder and the sun, and contemplate all creation round about, reflecting that these things, though they are so many and so great, will a little later have vanished from sight; and from all these things gather this thought—that since we are a part of the creation that dies, we have accepted that which falls to our lot from a common nature; since even marriage itself is a consolation for death. For inasmuch as it was not possible for men to abide for ever, the Maker has devised perpetuity of life by means of the succession of the race. But if we are distressed because she departed sooner than ourselves, let us not begrudge her who has not been satiated to the full with the troubles of life, but, after the fashion of a beautiful flower, has left us while we still were fond of her. But above all, let the doctrine of the resurrection cheer your soul, since you are a Christian and pass your life in hope of the blessings to come.

Thus, therefore, you should think of her—as having gone her way by a certain road which we too shall have to travel; and if as having gone before us, this is not a matter worthy of tears. For a little later our lot would perhaps be more pitiable, if by having extended our lives further we should become

TO THE WIFE OF BRISO,¹ CONSOLATORY

WHY should we even mention how deeply we lamented at the tidings of the misfortune which has come upon the best of men, Briso? For surely no one has a heart so stony that he, having had experience of that man, and then having heard of his being suddenly snatched from among men, did not consider the removal of the man to be a common loss to life. But straightway our grief was succeeded by solicitude for you, as we reflected that, if to those who are far removed from kinship that which has happened is so grievous and hard to bear, your soul has most likely been deeply affected by the calamity, you being by nature so kind, and on account of your gentleness of character inclined to sympathy, and so overwhelmed by the calamity as to feel in your separation from your husband a sort of cleaving in twain. For if in truth according to the Lord's² word they are no longer two but one flesh, clearly no less painful is such a disjoining than if the half of our body were torn away.

But while such things are painful and more than that, yet what consolation is there for what has happened? First, the legislation of our God which has prevailed from the beginning—that whoever comes to birth must surely at the proper time depart from life. If, then, man's lot from Adam to ourselves has been so ordered, let us not be vexed with the common laws of nature, but let us accept the dispensation of God concerning us, who bade that noble and unconquered soul, not when his body was spent by disease nor yet withered by time, to depart from this world, but in the full flower of his years and in the splendour of his successes in war to end his life. Therefore we should not be discontented that we have been separated from such a man; nay, let us give thanks to the Lord that we have been thought worthy of living with such a man, whose loss nearly all the Roman Empire has felt, whose name even the Emperor has called aloud, whom soldiers have bemoaned and those in the highest positions mourned as for a true son.

Since, then, he has left to you the memory of his own virtue, consider that you have sufficient solace for your grief. Then too I wish you to realize this—that he who does not falter under his afflictions, but through his hope in God bears his burden of sorrow, has a great recompense with God for his patience. For we are not permitted by the legislation of the Apostle to grieve equally with those outside the faith over those who have gone to rest. Also let your sons rather subtle, and thus has been misunderstood by previous editors. Basil is here ostensibly writing a letter of friendly salutation to a group of monks whom he knows well. He wishes them to believe this to be the real purpose of his letter. As if by chance he relates the high esteem in which the letter-bearer holds them, and is in all probability trying to restore the said letter-bearer to the good graces of the monks, who apparently have been grievously offended.

The heading of this letter shows that its author did not understand the writer's real purpose.

opinions and in the considerations which they happen to think of. And they happen to think of what they rejoice in, and they rejoice in what they wish. And he who thinks that what he wishes is profitable is not a safe judge of justice, but is like the blind being led by the blind.¹ Hence he also stumbles easily into losses ; and he has as a teacher of what is expedient—his experience only !

This is at the present time the misfortune which the person awaits who is yoked with the present man. For although he ought to turn over the decision to mutual friends—or rather, although he has been judged many times by many who have a care for justice and truth, he now has recourse to magistrates and the decision of the courts, and he chooses, although he has lost much, to gain a little. And decisions rendered by magistrates do not bring even victory without loss.

So come to the assistance, dear friend, preferably preventing for both litigants (for that were an act of piety) their resorting to the magistrate, and becoming for them a judge in his stead. But if either one does not agree to this and contends against your decisions, co-operate with the one who is suffering injustice, and let the influence you have been given to me who seeks to obtain justice.

MANY are the letters which those force me to write to your Honour who give no heed to our assurances, but seek some special and exceptional action in their own interests. For we have long since been insisting to them that you would be so impartial and fair a guardian of our rights that no one would seek any further in the matter of kindness, unless perchance he should go beyond all bounds in greed. But nevertheless, although we so informed this man, we have given him this letter, introducing him to you and urging you to look favourably upon him, and, because in times past his house has borne heavy burdens in public services, to deem him worthy of all possible encouragement.

LETTER CCCXIII

TO AN ASSESSOR OF TAXES¹

It is not possible from afar off to see the providences of God, but through pettiness of spirit we men gaze at that which is at our feet, and often when we are being led to a good end we become discontented, the Lord who administers all things in His own wisdom putting up with our ignorance. You doubtless recall, for instance, how discontented we once were at the care² which had been imposed upon us, how many friends we summoned in order that through them we might thrust spiteful treatment³ aside. For thus we called the matter.

But now you see what the present situation is. For God has given you an opportunity of bringing the nobility of your character to light and of leaving behind to all posterity occasions for fond memory. For whatever is the quality of these tax-assessments, just such in the nature of the case is the memory which coming generations will preserve of them. Since even in answer to prayer it would not have been possible for the Galatians to obtain a man of

For I too have a home in Galatia, and with God's help the most splendid of homes, respecting which if I could obtain some assistance from you (and I shall obtain it, as long as friendship has its proper force), I shall be very grateful to God.

If, then, any account of my friendship is taken by your Honour, be so kind for our sake as to grant a certain agreed-upon assistance to the house of the most excellent magistrate Sulpicius,¹ so as to deduct something from his present rating—if possible a considerable amount and worthy of your Magnanimity, and, I shall add, worthy of the intercession of us who love you: but if that be impossible, yet as much as the times allow and the nature of the situation permits; but by all means so as to deduct something, and not to permit the tax to remain at the same amount; to the end that, of the countless benefactions which we have received from the good magistrate,² we may repay this one through the aid of your August Reverence.

WITHOUT ADDRESS, CONCERNING A SALUTATION ¹

It is only after a long interval that it has become possible for us to address your Honour, because the bearer of our answer tarried a long time in our country and fell among both men and affairs that proved rather difficult. For he has been estranged from the land that bore him for a whole year. Led on by the deceits of men and by liquidations of the debt—by the thought that if he should overcome the villany about him, he would be master of the whole situation—late did he perceive the sum-total of his loss, not until his sense of perception had been previously beguiled by the gradual deceit.

Now since he is returning, freed from the troubles of climate and the wickedness of men, we greet you through him, urging you to be mindful of us in your prayers (for great is the assistance we need from prayers¹), and at the same time we inform you that those responsible parties designated by the late blessed bishop for the payment of the debt—since the indebtedness itself was mentioned in his will, and whence it should be paid, and through whom—disregarding the suggestions of friends await the compulsory action of the law-courts. Wherefore our predecessor in the see of Caesarea, and the lawsuit mentioned has grown out of his will. The person recommended here has been working on the case for at least a year according to the context, and it is now the second year after Basil's elevation to the episcopacy. Hence the year is 372.

The similarity in subject-matter in this letter and in Letter CCCVII is very striking and would lead one to associate the two letters as being of the same date.

DURING the past year the cold has been severe in our country, and has damaged the eyelids of the vines that were already being loosed for travail; but being left sterile they have rendered our cups unwet and unmoistened. Gregory had written three other letters to Thecla. Finally, while the present letter exists in the family of Basilian MSS known as Aa, it is one of the last of that group, Number CLI, and only the first one hundred are regarded as going back to the original collection by Gregory. The present letter and several others are believed to have been added to the collection by another editor about A.D. 389 or 390.

WHEN I received the letter of your Honour I was delighted, as was natural, and I gave thanks to the Lord, and I was eager to make response, and I should have done so had anyone reminded me in season about the copies⁵ of the documents. For although the matter regarding which you had instructed us was slowly approaching its settlement, yet it was not possible before the conclusion of it to say anything certain in reply. This is the cause of our silence; for it was not indifference or ignorance of what is proper. For even if we had been altogether indifferent, we should certainly have taken

But as it is, it is not within our power to forget you even for the briefest moment (or sooner would one be unconscious of oneself¹); nay, whether we write or not, we bear you about with us enshrined within our hearts, and so fretful are we at the long waning of the winter that we pray that, if it is not possible for you yourself, on account of the pre-occupations of which we hear, to leave your rustics, we may find an occasion to visit your region and to enjoy the true steadfastness of your character and the decorum of your life. For although we do not say that we can lay any claim to elegance of style, yet by a sort of natural instinct we are charmed by it. and you who are graceful of speech attract us, even as men attract bees by the humming of a lyre. at the very doors, so to speak, of the entrance. Now it is worth while in itself to read a friendly letter; but if that which is written also accomplishes the necessary result in very important matters, it is obviously worth far more.

Rest assured, accordingly, that Patricius, an excellent man in all respects, bears so many charms of persuasion on his lips that he—to say nothing of the letter which you wrote—could easily persuade even a Sauromatan or a Scythian, should he get hold of one, about any matter he might wish. Yet surely those phrases of good cheer of his are not from the heart. For this scheme has been practised from of old—for men to be, so far as speech goes, simple-minded and inexperienced in the ways of the world, forsooth, and ready to submit their interests to any court, but when they came to deal with the matters themselves, may you at least not happen to be there!

But let me tell you this in order that you yourself may know that the man is not in any way easily led; and furthermore that you may be convinced on your part not to pay attention to the beauty of his phrases but to await the proofs from facts.

letter Basil analyses the character of a certain Patricius, concerning whom his friend the addressee, Pasimicus, had made some disparaging remark. "The excellent man in all respects" is plausible and insincere and not to be trusted; his simple manner and his affectation of inexperience are only a device to deceive, hence beware of him!

Furthermore, it is worthy of note that the title of σεμνότης, used in this letter, is used only of laymen of distinction, which would be quite befitting a former κόμης.

Accordingly, if the hypothesis above be true, this letter was probably written several years later than Letter CLXXV, which was composed in 376. •

Libanius, the distinguished Greek sophist and rhetorician, was born at Antioch, on the Orontes, about A D 314, and lived until the end of the fourth century. He conducted schools of rhetoric successively at Constantinople, Nicomedia, and Antioch. But since it is not possible to meet all men at the same time, as they make their choice of what is suited to themselves, those whom from time to time are won over we send along to you, conferring as great a favour upon them as do those who guide the thirsty to springs of water.

And he who now comes to you will in a little while be cherished for his own sake, after he has associated with you. But now he is known for his father, who has won a great reputation among us for uprightness of life and civic power; and he has also been bound to me in the closest friendship. And in return for this friendship, I am giving this favour to his son, by making him known to you—and that is a thing worth praying for earnestly by men who know how to estimate the excellence of a man.¹

LIBANIUS TO BASIL²

AFTER an interval a young Cappadocian has come to us. This is one advantage—that he is a Cappadocian. But furthermore this Cappadocian is of the first families. This is a second advantage. But also he comes bringing us a letter from the admirable Basil. This is a point than which—who could name one more important? For I, who you think have forgotten you, not only knew you long ago when you were young, when I saw you vying with the old men in sobriety (and that too in the famous city¹ which teemed with pleasures!), and already possessing a great share of eloquence. And then when you thought that you should see Athens also, and you prevailed upon Celsus² to accompany you, I congratulated Celsus for being dear to your heart. And when you returned and dwelt in your fatherland, I said to myself: "What is our Basil doing now, and to what mode of life has he turned? Is he frequenting the courts, emulating the orators of old? Or is he making orators of the sons of wealthy fathers?" But when there came persons bearing the tidings that you were traversing ways of life far better than these, and that you were considering how you might become more pleasing to God rather than how you could amass wealth, I congratulated both you and the Cappadocians, you for wishing to be a man of that kind, and them for being able to produce such a citizen.

And as for that Firmus,³ I know well that he has continued to prevail everywhere—for that is the source from which he gets his power of words. And although he has enjoyed much praise, I am inclined to think that he has never enjoyed praise so great as I have just now read in your letter. For when it is you that says that no one could surpass him in reputation, how great a tribute to him must one consider this!

And you seem to me to have despatched these Libanius. According to Libanius (Letter DCXXXIV), Celsus pronounced a panegyric on the Emperor Julian on his entrance into Cilicia.

men also before, seeing Firminus;¹ for otherwise your letter would not have failed to mention him. And what is Firminus doing now, or what does he intend to do? Is he still yearning for marriage? Or has all that long since ceased and is it now the Senate that weighs heavily upon him, with every necessity requiring him to remain in it? Or what hopes are there that he will again take part in learned studies? Let him make some reply to us, and may it be something good; but even if it shall cause us some grief, it will at least relieve us of looking towards the portals!² But if Firminus did happen to be at Athens at this moment, what would your senators do? Would they send the "Salamina"³ after him? You see that it is only by your fellow-citizens that I am insulted! However, I for my part shall not cease to love and to praise the Cappadocians; but though I pray that they may become kinder towards me, yet I shall bear with them even if they remain in the same ways. But Firminus was with us four months, and idled not a day. And as to how much has been gathered by him, you yourself will know, and perhaps you will not complain. But that he may be able to come here again, whom ought we to summon as an ally? For if the senators are wise—and it would befit educated men to be so—they will honour me in the second case, since they have caused me disappointment in the first.

Sicilian expedition, an incident to which Aristophanes, Birds 147, refers: μηδαμῶς | ἡμῖν παρὰ τὴν θάλατταν, ἵν' ἀνακίψεται | κλητῆρ' ἄγουσ' ἔωθεν ἡ Σαλαμινία, "By no means do we want a place by the sea, where the Salamina will bob up bringing a summoner from that town (Athens)!" Thus the vessel and its use for bringing men back to Athens passed into a proverb. Cf. Apostolius 15 31.

BEHOLD, still another Cappadocian has come for you, he too a son of mine; ² for this dignity which is now ours makes all men our sons by adoption. Therefore, according to this, he would be a brother of his predecessor, and worthy of the same attention both from me his father and from you his teacher—if indeed it is possible for those who come from us to receive any advantage at all ³ And this I say, not with the thought that your Eloquence would not bestow a greater favour upon your old-time comrades, but with the knowledge that your assistance is offered without stint to all

But it would suffice for the young man, before he has been tested by time, to be placed among your own intimates; and may you return him to us a man worthy both of our prayers and of the reputation which you possess in learned eloquence. And he brings with him a youth of like age who has the same zeal for eloquence, he also being of noble parentage and related to us. We trust that he will be at no disadvantage, even if he should fall far behind the rest in wealth.

LIBANIUS TO BASIL

I KNOW that you will often write: "Behold, still another Cappadocian has come for you!" For many, I think, you will send, since you always and everywhere indulge in eulogies of me and by this very practice stir up both fathers and sons.

But as to what happened in connection with your good letter, it would not be good to be silent. There were seated by me not a few men who had held official positions, in addition to the altogether most excellent Alypius,¹ cousin of the famous Hierocles. Now when the bearers delivered the letter, after going through it all in silence I said, smiling the while and rejoicing: "We have been vanquished!" "And in what have you been vanquished?" they asked; "and why do you not grieve at having been vanquished?" I said: "I have been worsted in beauty of epistolary style. And it is Basil who has gained the upper hand. But the man is dear to me, and on this account I am delighted." When I had said this, they wanted to learn about the victory from the letter itself. And so Alypius read, while those present listened. And the vote was passed that I had in no way lied. And holding the letter the reader went out, I suppose to show it to others also, and only his son (Lib. Ep. 327, Amm. 29. 1, 44). As vicar in Britain under Julian (Lib. Ep. 327), he became a friend of the Emperor (Jul. Ep. 29) and was commissioned by him to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem (Amm. 23. 1, 2, 3). In 371, he and his son were banished (Amm. 29. 1, 44) on a charge of attempted poisoning.

But in truth there was also something indescribably delightful in the language you used in your game with us. It was as if a Polydamas¹ or a Milo² should beg to be excused from a contest in the pancration³ or in boxing with me!⁴ For after examining your letter many times I found no sign of any weakness in it; consequently, those who seek extravagances in speech admire you more for your ability in this, that you are so able to descend in your games to our level, than if you had led the barbarian when he sailed over Athos.⁵ But as for us, admirable sir, we associate with Moses and Elias and such blessed men, who communicate their thoughts to us in a barbarian tongue, and it is what we learn from them that we give utterance to—in substance true, though in style unlearned, as indeed these present words show. beautiful that those who were present with us could not refrain from leaping to their feet when it was being read. I therefore expressed surprise that in your attempt to disparage the former by the latter, by saying that the former was like the latter, you have but embellished the former by the latter!

But the right method, surely, for one who wanted what you did, would have been to make the latter worse by maligning the former. But it was not possible, I think, for you to wrong the truth. And it would have been wronged, had you purposely written more poorly than you did instead of making use of your powers. It would therefore be fitting for the same man not to find fault, either, with what it were just to praise, lest the act carry you away and cast you into the ranks of the sophists for trying to make great things lowly. Nay, rather stick to your books, whose style you say is inferior, though their substance is superior, and there is no one to prevent you. But of that which has always been ours and was formerly yours the roots not only remain but will remain as long as you live, and no lapse of time could ever excise them, not even if you should almost wholly neglect to water them.

I THINK that I should rather apologize for not having begun to write to you long ago than make an excuse for having begun to do so now. For I am the one who ran towards you whenever you appeared, with the greatest pleasure giving ear to the flow of your tongue, and rejoicing when you spoke, and with difficulty tearing myself away, and saying to my companions: "This man is the more charming than the daughters of Achelous,¹ in that he enchants even as they do, but does not harm as do they. His doing no harm is only a small matter, but manifestly his melodious words are a boon to him who receives them." Therefore that I, who hold to such an opinion, who think that I am even regarded with affection, and who am reputed to have ability in speaking, cannot bring myself to write, must be imputed to extreme laziness, and it would at the same time be a token of a man inflicting punishment upon himself. For it is evident that you will send in exchange for my brief and wretched letter one that is both beautiful and ample, and you will surely be on your guard lest you wrong me a second time also.

² The place referred to is obscure. In Athens the στρατήγιον was the office of the general; in Constantinople in the Byzantine period it was used for the camp. It is certain that Basil was never in camp with Libanius, but this may be argued as just another indication of the spurious nature of this letter. Cf. Prefatory Note of this volume. Some try to see a proper name, Strategios, here.

But I think that many will cry out against the word "wrong" and will crowd around me clamouring in protest against the situation: "Has Basil done any wrong, however slight? Then also has Aeacus, and Minos, and the latter's brother."¹

But I agree that in the other letter you have been victorious—and who is there that has seen you and is not envious?—yet if I remind you of this—that you have erred against us in some one thing, persuade those who are angry to cease crying out against me. No one who has approached you and asked a favour which it was easy to grant has come away disappointed. Well, I am one of those who have asked a favour but have received it not. What, then, did I ask? Often when I was with you at the bar² I longed to delve with the aid of your wisdom into the depths of Homer's frenzy. But if that longing is not practicable in its entirety, at least introduce us to a passage about the casting of the lots. And I always wanted to know about a passage where, after the Greeks had fared badly, Agamemnon conciliated with gifts the man³ whom he had insulted. As I say this, you laugh, being unable to deny that you

¹ Libanius, playfully teasing Basil, pretends that Basil has wronged him by not granting him one favour for which he had asked—the exposition of Homer. He now calls upon him to direct him to two passages, the contents of which he describes sufficiently for identification. The passages are selected for the analogy they offer to the case of Basil "victorious" over Libanius in the epistolary style. Cf. Letters CCCXXXVIII and CCCXXXIX.

In Iliad 7. 92 ff. nine Achaean chieftains cast lots to see which is to fight Hector in single combat. Libanius is rather subtle here, but one may conjecture that he wishes to draw Basil's attention to lines 89–91, where Hector thus speaks of the glory that will come to him through the fame of the glorious Hector slew.' So shall many a one say, and my glory shall never die."

The implications of the second passage, Iliad 19 183 ff., are more obvious. When the Achaeans are hard pressed by the Trojans and the Achaeans are sorely in need of the aid of Achilles, still sulking in his tent because of the indignity put upon him by Agamemnon in taking Briseis from him, Agamemnon is prevailed upon by his leaders to placate him by gifts. Odysseus, who advises Agamemnon also to return Briseis, ends his speech thus, lines 181 ff. "Son of Atreus, towards others thou shalt be more righteous hereafter, for in no wise is it blame for a king to make amends to another, if so be he wax wroth without a cause."

LETTER CCCL

BASIL TO LIBANIUS ²

DISSOLVED is your ill-temper! For let this be the proem of my letter. And do you go on ridiculing and disparaging our actions, whether laughing or in earnest. But why have you mentioned snow and garlic, when you might have made fun of our jokes? But I, Libanius—that I may even rouse you to loud laughter—have written this letter while covered over with a blanket of snow, and when you receive it and touch it with your hands, you will recognize how cold a thing it is and how it characterizes the sender who lurks within and cannot put his head out of his chamber. For the houses we possess are graves until spring returns and brings us who were corpses back to life, once more bestowing existence upon us, as upon plants.

For no one thought it good to be absent from the contests, neither he who lived amid a vast and impressive dignity, nor he who stood conspicuous in the lists of eligibles for military service, nor he who was busy in the menial crafts. And at last even women hastened to be present at the contests. "But what is the contest? And what is the oration which has brought together the assemblage of all the people?" And so they told me that the orator had just begun a speech of a man of irritable disposition.¹ This oration which has been so admired do not begrudge to send to me, that I also may be a eulogist of your eloquence. LIBANIUS TO BASIL²

You are not, are you, Basil, living in Athens, and have not been aware of it? For no sons of Caesarea could have been your audience when you spoke thus. Why, my own tongue was not accustomed to such language; nay, it was struck giddy, as when one goes down a precipice, by the novelty of the words you used, and said to me, its father.³ "Father, you have not so taught A Homer is this man, nay rather a Plato, nay rather an Aristotle, nay rather a Sousarion,⁴ this man who knows everything!" And so indeed did my tongue speak. But would that you, Basil, might praise us in such fashion!

³ Because the tongue is trained by its possessor, as a father trains his child.

¹ Letters CCCLXI to CCCLXIV have been the subject of much discussion. Apollinarius, bishop of Laodicea, the other participant in the correspondence, was condemned as a heretic by the Synod of Alexandria in 362, also by the Synod of Rome under Pope Damasus and by the Council of Constantinople. According to Basil's own testimony he corresponded with Apollinarius when both were laymen, but not concerning any questions of dogma. It is known that Eustathius changed the text of a letter written by Basil to Apollinarius and had it circulated in order to convict Basil of being in communion with Apollinarius. That letter, however, does not seem to be in this group of four letters.

LETTER CCCLXI

I believe in one God, the Father Almighty, God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Spirit; one God, the Three, do I worship and glorify. And I confess also the dispensation of the Son in the flesh, and Holy Mary mother of God who bore Him in the flesh. And I accept also the holy Apostles, prophets, and martyrs, and I call upon these for supplication unto God, that through them, that is, through their mediation, the kind God may become propitious to me, and that there may be and be granted to me atonement also for my sins; wherefore I both honour and kiss the features of their images, especially of those who have been handed down from the holy Apostles and are not forbidden, but are represented in all our churches.

Yet the letters of this group seem to have been forged for the same purpose. It is worthy of note also that these four letters are entirely lacking in all but two MSS. of Basil.

For the theological discussion and the terminology used see Introduction and Letter VIII with notes, Vol. I

The more important terminology is as follows:

ἀνόμοιος, dissimilis, unlike.

οὐσία, substantia (although the Latin rendering is etymologically the same as ὑπόστασις), substance.

ὁμοούσιος, consubstantialis, consubstantial, of the same substance.

ὁμοιούσιος, similis quoad substantiam, of similar substance.

ὑπόστασις, at first substance, later as in this letter, persona, person, cf. Vol. I, Introduction, XXVII.

Now since those who are confusing everything, and have filled the world with arguments and investigations, have cast aside the name of "substance" as foreign to the Divine Scriptures, deign to inform us both how the fathers used it and whether you have found that it exists anywhere in Scripture. For such expressions as "the supersubstantial bread,"¹ and "the acceptable people,"² and the like they scornfully reject as having nothing in common. In the second place, moreover, regarding "consubstantial" itself (because of which I think they are getting up this affair, slandering "substance" deeply, in order to leave no room for "consubstantial"), be so kind as to make a more elaborate analysis for us, as to what meaning it has, and how it may be used soundly in matters wherein neither a common overlying class is discerned nor an underlying pre-existing material, no division of the first into the second. How, then, we should speak of the Son as "consubstantial" with the Father without falling into one of the aforementioned meanings, please explain to us more fully. For we have supposed that whatever by way of hypothesis the substance of the Father is assumed to be, this must by all means be assumed as also that of the Son. So that if anyone should speak of the substance of the Father as light perceptible to the mind, eternal, unbegotten, he would also call the substance of the Only-begotten light perceptible to the mind, eternal, unbegotten. And in such a meaning the expression "like without a difference" seems to me to accord better than "consubstantial." For light which has no difference from light in the matter of greater and less cannot be the same (because each is in its own sphere of substance), but I think that "like in substance entirely without difference" could be said correctly. Therefore whether these thoughts should be discussed or other greater ones taken up, like a wise physician (for we have opened up to you what is in our heart), heal our weakness and sustain what is rotten, and in every way strengthen us.

I greet the brothers who are with your Piety and ask that with you they may pray for us that we may be saved. Our friend Gregory, who has chosen to live with his parents, is with them. In good health may you be preserved to us for the longest while, giving aid to us both by your prayers and by your knowledge.

APOLLINARIUS TO BASIL¹

You believe as a lover of God, and you seek as a lover of knowledge, and on our part good-will is due through charity, even though full satisfaction should not follow on our words, on account both of our own deficiency and of the preternatural nature of the subject.

Substance is called one not in number alone, as you say, and as to its being confined to a single sphere, but also in a special manner, as when two men and any other person are united by class;² so that in this sense both two and more are the same in substance, just as all we men are Adam, being one, and David is the son of David, as being the same as David his father; just as you rightly say that the Son is the same in substance as the Father. For not otherwise would the Son be God, since God the Father is confessed as one and only; just as, no doubt, there is both one Adam, the first of the human race, and one David, the first of a race of kings.

In this way, to be sure, it will be conjectured from suppositions that there is one overlying class, or one underlying material, in the case of Father and Son, whenever we assume the genarchic principle of the first beginning, and races coming from the origination of the race, with reference to the only begotten offspring of the one beginning. For in a measure such do come into a likeness. Just as of Adam, as one made by God, and of us, as descendants of men, there is not one overlying race, but he himself is the beginning of men; neither is there a common material of him and us, but he himself is the foundation of all men. Nor in truth of David, and of the race descended from David, is any idea conceived beforehand, since the peculiar nature of David begins with David, and the foundation of all men descended from him is himself; but since these fail in so far as there are other common qualities of all men in relation to each other, as for example brothers, yet in the case of the Father and the Son such is not true, but in all respects the Father is the beginning and the Son is from the beginning.

Therefore there is no division of the first into the second, as in the case of bodies, but descentance. For not even the peculiar nature of the Father has been divided as it were into the Son, but that of the Son appeared from that of the Father; the same in difference, and different in sameness, just as it is said that the Father is in the Son, and the Son in the Father. For neither will generic difference preserve entirely the truth of sonship, nor identity on the other hand preserve the indivisibility of person, but each is entwined with the other and single; the same in a different way, and different in the same way—to utter perforce terms that do not reach the mark of explanation—since the Lord confirms to us this conception that the Father is greater in his equality, and that the Son possesses equality in His subordination; even as He taught us to understand the Son in a like but lower light, not changing the substance but viewing the same as both superior and as in a lower order. For those who have accepted substance in no sameness, bringing in likeness from outside, apply it to the Son, which indeed passes over also to men, that is, to those who are become likened to God.

But those who realize that likeness befits creatures, join the Son with the Father in sameness, but in an inferior sameness, in order that He may not be the Father himself or a part of the Father, conditions which are represented effectively by the expression: "another¹ is the Son, in this sense God," not as being God, but as being from God, not the prototype, but an image. Such a one is "consubstantial," transcendently in all respects and peculiarly; not as things of the same class, not as things divided, but as of one class and kind of divinity, one and only offspring, with an indivisible and incorporeal progress, by which that which generates, remaining in its generic peculiarity, has proceeded into its genetic peculiarity.

To my master, my most reverend brother Apollinarius, I Basil send greetings. We have failed to find the opportunities which could have enabled us to address your Piety, although we should have been glad to write in reply to those letters of yours. For that you in silence held back the pleasure you yourself felt in those others was pleasing to us. For in truth you alone seemed to us to be wise (but the shades of interpreters are flitting about!), when you brought your exposition of the meaning to a safe basis as you did. To my master, my most beloved brother Basil, Apollinarius sends greetings in the Lord. Where was I myself, master, and where the most beloved voice and the customary letter? And why are you not here to defend yourself, or, even though absent, why do you not cheer us on, when so great a war has broken out against religion, and we, as if in the midst of the battle-line, are shouting to our comrades on account of the violence of the enemy? But as for you, we do not even know how we may make search for you, for we cannot find out even where you happen to be staying. discover you where I had hoped. And now, having heard that you are still tarrying in the same country,¹ I have immediately entrusted this letter also to him who informed me. And when you receive this, do not refrain from answering, seeing that this messenger is with you in your sojourn abroad

And be informed that in the meantime we have received a visit from the bishops of Egypt, and that documents were distributed which were in harmony with those of old, with both the divine words themselves, and those written at Nicaea in unison with the divine pronouncements. And a repetition of the same, together with an interpretation, was necessary on account of the unsound misinterpretation of the texts which had been introduced by those who of old spoke in outright contradiction and to-day are cunningly exploiting their contradiction under the guise of an interpretation. It was herein that occurred the villainous destruction of "consubstantial," the pretext being that the term ought not to be understood on the basis of any denial of it in Greek; but a substitute expression for "consubstantial" is "like as regards substance"—an expression that was deliberately invented, confusedly named as it was and maliciously devised; since "likeness" belongs to things which are in substance, that is, things substantial, in order, in fact, that a substance thus made like may be conceived of as substance, as, for example, an emperor's statue in relation to an emperor.

In reply to these statements was written the declaration composed by those who know how to be true to religion and so desire, to the effect that "consubstantial" does not signify "like God" but

BASIL TO THE GREAT EMPEROR THEODOSIUS²

A CALAMITY has come upon our country, not because of any misfortune to our bodies, but because of a flood of water. But I shall show how this happened. A heavy fall of snow took place in our marshy territory. And before it had yet frozen a warm breeze came up, and a southerly rain coincided with it. Therefore, when the thaw arrived of a sudden, immense streams were set flowing which mingled with a perennial river, the Halys, now become a torrent—streams which surpassed all description and anything we have ever seen. This is the neighbouring river that fortune has given us, which comes gushing out of ment, made elsewhere, about the forty martyrs; and it is contained in only five MSS. Tillemont, however, thought the style of this letter not unworthy of a young man and a rhetorician, and conjectures that it was written early in Basil's life and not to the great emperor, but to some magistrate of Cappadocia.

Since that time (believe that I speak the truth, noble sir), this river that encircles us like a hostile tribe of fearful men has caused us no little fear. For since it is never crossed on foot at any time or in any manner, it does not permit our indispensable and profitable home-lands to transport across it the provisions we have for sale. I mean, namely, the lands of the Galatians, and Paphlagonians, and Hellenopontians, through which and from which we have our necessities, especially abundance of bread, since the land all around is subject to frosts, and fettered by the surrounding climate and by the crushing wrath of lightning, thunder, hail, and flood combined. For the Lord, having compassion on the life, full of lamentations, lived by the Jews, willed that they should walk with unmoistened feet in the Red Sea as on dry land, having given them as a guide Moses. BASIL TO URBICIUS, A MONK, ON CONTINENCE¹

You do well in making strict rules for us, that we may see not only continence but also its fruit. Now its fruit is communion with God. For to be free from corruption is to partake of God, just as the state of corruption is communion with the world. For continence is denial of body and confession to God. It departs from everything mortal, having as it were a body in the Spirit of God; and it causes us to mingle with God, having neither rivalry nor envy. For he who loves a body envies another, but he who has not brought the disease of corruption into his heart is strengthened thereafter for every labour, although dying in body, yet living in incorruption. editions of the letters. Letters CCCLXVII and CCCLXVIII, lately discovered by Mercati, have never before been included in a collection of Basil's letters.

The present letter seems to be spurious chiefly because of its poor MS tradition. It appears in only three MSS of late date. None of the ancient MSS. contain it. According to Bessières this letter is not in Marcianus 61, as Mai asserts.

within Him was His continence that His nourishment was not corrupted in Him, since He Himself had no corruption.

If continence exist in us in but a slight degree, we are superior to all things. For we have heard that even angels, being incontinent, have been cast down from heaven, because of lust. For they were convicted, they did not descend of themselves; for what business had this disease of incontinence in heaven unless there was some competent eye to detect it? It is on this account that I said: "If we possess continence in but a slight degree, and do not love the world but the life above, we shall be found there, whither we direct our mind's eye." For it seems that this is the eye which can see invisible things. And indeed we have the saying: "The mind sees and the mind hears."¹ These things, though they seem to you little, I have written out at length, because each expression is a thought; and I know that when you have read them you will perceive this.

THE INTERPRETATION OF GENESIS 4. 15, DISCUSSED IN LETTER CCLX

THE passage which Basil endeavours to interpret to Bishop Optimus has always caused difficulty to both translators and exegetes. The cause of the difficulty is deep-seated, going back to the Hebrew, which admits of at least two interpretations. The difficulties inherent in the Hebrew were multiplied in the Septuagint version, where the translators used ambiguous terms to render what they did not understand. The following brief survey (for which I am indebted to Dr. Ralph Marcus of New York, who is translating Josephus for the Loeb Classical Library) aims at little more than to trace in bare outline the course of the attempts of the early Christian scholars to understand the meaning of the Septuagint version. Basil succeeds no better than the others.

In the Hebrew, two translations are possible: (a) "anyone who kills Cain, he (i.e. the murderer of Cain) shall be punished sevenfold"; or, less probably, (b) "anyone who kills Cain, it (i.e. the crime) shall be avenged (or 'punished') sevenfold." Most biblical scholars explain that the sevenfold punishment consisted in killing seven men of the tribe of the murderer, according to primitive Semitic custom.

It is the Greek ancient versions which cause the main difficulties. The LXX reads ἐπτὰ ἐκδικούμενα παραλύσει ἐκδικούμενα. Now ἐκδικούμενα should mean "expiations," "penalties," or "punishments" according to LXX usage. παραλύσει presents great difficulty. It has several quite different meanings in LXX. In one place it is equivalent to Hebrew nathan, "to give." Philo was puzzled by the literal meaning of the LXX phrase, as is seen from Quod. Det. Potiori Insid. Soleat 167, where he paraphrases παραλύσει by παρίεται and ἐκλύεται. The later Greek versions of Scripture are clearer. They are: Aquila, ἐπταπλασίως ἐκδικηθήσεται . . . , Symmachus, ἐβδόμῳ ἐκδίκησιν δώσει . . . , Theodotion, δι' ἐβδόμαδος ἐκδικήσει. . . .

The Vulgate septuplum punietur presents no great difficulty in itself, nor does the Syriac, commonly translated "sevenfold it (i.e. the murder) shall be punished."

In Jewish traditional exegesis is found Targum: "Anyone who kills Cain, after (or 'for') seven generations, punishment shall be inflicted on him." On the basis of this, the rabbis and mediaeval commentators explained that Cain's punishment was deferred for seven generations until Lamech in the seventh generation killed him. In Ginzberg, Legends of the Jews, Vol. V p. 144, is the following note: "Jerome cites another Jewish tradition according to which the Bible speaks of the seven sins which Cain had to atone for: (1) he did not divide his sacrifice properly, (2) he was jealous of his brother, (3) he deceitfully lured him to death, (4) he killed his brother, (5) he denied this act, (6) he asserted that his sin could not be forgiven, (7) he did not repent of his sin during his long life." In this connection, of special interest is what Basil says, p. 55 near end, in the early part of the letter. "Now among the daring deeds done by Cain, the first sin is envy at the preference of Abel; the second, guile, etc."

For a complete discussion of the entire question, see Vigouroux, Dictionnaire de la Bible, Vol. II, Paris, 1899, art "Cain," col. 39; J. Skinner, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on Genesis, New York, 1910, p. 110.

ADDRESS TO YOUNG MEN ON READING GREEK LITERATURE

PREFATORY NOTE

St. Basil's Address to Young Men, on How They Might Derive Benefit from Greek Literature, is a short work, but one that has attracted great interest in all times. While listed among his sermons, it appears never to have been delivered as such, but to be rather a finely polished essay. H. Buttner, in his dissertation published in Munich in 1908, tried to show that a Cyno-Stoic treatise served as a model and source for Basil, but his arguments are not convincing.

Basil wrote this essay when he was advanced in years, for he himself speaks of "my advanced age" as one of the reasons which urged him to accomplish the task. Some time had thus elapsed since he had resigned his chair of rhetoric, and it cannot, accordingly, be said that he was addressing the pupils studying at the municipal foundation. It is possible, as has been suggested, that he was giving a sort of moral lecture to the young men who made up a kind of seminary of his, either those who had just entered upon their studies for the priesthood or who had already received minor orders and were living in close contact with him. In any case the work sums up Basil's ideas, towards the end of a life of wide experience, on a question much-mooted in his day:—Should the study of the pagan classics of Greek literature form an important part of a system of Christian education?¹ And since the work was published, Basil undoubtedly intended that it should perform as widespread a service as possible and not be limited to his own seminary or surroundings.

That St. Basil knew classical Greek literature as a whole very well we might conjecture from what we know of his education.² A careful reading of his works, however, brings this out very clearly and shows that he was well conversant with certain types of Greek literature.

Although Basil comparatively rarely cites authors, he mentions among the poets Aeschylus (Letter LXXIV), Euripides (189A, Letter LXIII), Archilochus (183D), Simonides (Letter LXXIV), Solon (177A), Theognis (177D), Hesiod (17A, 176A), and Homer (181c, D, Letters XIV, CXLVII, CLXXXVI, CCCXLVIII). There are other references that can be traced to Aeschylus, Sophocles (Letters I, VIII), Euripides, and perhaps Aristophanes.³ In addition to those already mentioned there are passages which may be traced to Alcman and Bion. Basil was more at home among the epic poets. He quotes or alludes to Hesiod at least four times and to Homer twenty-three times. The bulk of the Homeric references or quotations have to do with the Odyssey, about one-third as many with the Iliad; and the Homeric Hymns and the Margites, long attributed to Homer, are referred to once each. All the instances from Hesiod are from the Works and Days.

² Cf. Introduction, Vol. I.

³ Cf. Jacks, St. Basil and Greek Literature, p. 42

PREFATORY NOTE

Basil seems well acquainted with the legends and history of Greece. There are eighteen references that are easily traceable to Herodotus, two to Thucydides, two to Xenophon, and twenty-four to Plutarch.¹ Throughout his works Basil's use of history and legend is literary or rhetorical and never scientific. He mingles the history and legend indiscriminately.

In the use of the philosophers, or such authors as are usually classed among the philosophers, Basil borrowed most from Plato. In this he was like most of the other Fathers, both Latin and Greek, who found much in Plato's writings which so approached the Christian ideals and was so beautifully expressed that they were inclined to draw upon Plato's phraseology freely. Aristotle's influence on Basil was far less direct than that of Plato, but that Basil knew Aristotle thoroughly is evident from Letter CXXXV. In this letter, after expressing a very sound opinion of the rhetoric of his day, Basil very discerningly characterizes at some length the literary styles of Plato, Aristotle, and Theophrastus. The influence of the other philosophers is rather difficult to find, although some remarks may be referred to Diogenes Laertius. He also cites Anaximander, Anaximenes, Democritus, Leucippus, Empedocles, and Xenophanes of Colophon.

In Attic literature the only men whom Basil seems to have left out of his ready references are the Attic orators. A single mention (Letter III) is made of Demosthenes, but Antiphon, Andocides, Lysias, and others, who were widely known and admired, do not appear. An orator's works do not lend themselves to a moralist for quotation so

Basil's education was obtained at the pagan university of Athens, and the pagan Greek classics formed the main part of the curriculum. For four or five years he read and studied these works with a zeal and intelligence that drew attention and compliments from all his teachers. His ready reference to the productions of the old masters, and his insight into their spirit, are evident. In view of these facts alone, his attitude towards the pagan classics would seem to need no explanation. But in his Address to Young Men, Basil confirms his almost obvious stand by direct statement, saying specifically that when the pagan writers teach what is good, and noble, and true, they are to be read, while if they teach vice they must be shunned. There exists no more explicit declaration of the right position of the classics in education than this. Every educator from Plato down has maintained similar views. "If anyone," says Basil, "praises the good thus, we shall listen to his words with satisfaction, for our objects are in common." And again, "Thus, then, we shall be influenced by those writings of pagan authors which contain an exposition of virtue." His position is definite enough. The pagan classics have a place in Christian education, and, when properly selected and intelligently taught and received, their influence in education is beneficial and necessary.

As a matter of fact, no one of the Fathers has expressed himself as opposed without compromise to pagan literature in its entirety. Traditionally St. John Chrysostom has had the worst reputation in this respect. Without making any serious investigation of the vast bulk of Chrysostom's sermons, historians and literary critics from E. Gibbon down to E. Norden have repeated the charge that Chrysostom was either profoundly indifferent or irreconcilably hostile to pagan culture and literature. The former¹ attributes to him "the judgment to conceal the advantages which he derived from the knowledge of rhetoric and philosophy." A Naegele² was the first to evaluate properly Chrysostom's real attitude and to show conclusively from Chrysostom's own statements that he deserves a place beside Origen, Basil, Augustine, and others who advocated a compromise between Hellenism and Christianity.

For all practical purposes such a compromise was established in fact by the middle of the fourth century. The Christian Fathers of this period were all thoroughly imbued with the classical culture and gave evidence of it in their writings. Theoretically, however, opinions were divided as to whether or not Christian thought should be set forth in the polished language of the pagan classics.³ Some of the Fathers, like Augustine⁴ and Gregory Nazianzen,⁵ wavered in their attitude. Some of Gregory's bitter invectives against pagan writers and rhetors give the impression that he is altogether hostile to profane literature, while other of his statements show him in favour of enlisting its formal beauty in the exposition of Christian doctrine.

Chrysostom's attitude is similar. He sometimes allows his zeal to carry him too far, to censure not only the errors and vices of paganism, but profane writers and literature in general, and this has led critics like Norden¹ to pronounce him "the most bitter foe of paganism in the fourth century." But although as applied to pagan error and immorality this statement is true, yet a sympathetic study of his sermons will show that at heart Chrysostom is not hostile to the refining and cultural influences of antiquity.

St. Basil stands out alone among the Fathers in the quiet restraint, the Atticism, as it were, of his style. While being just as intensively opposed to the error and immorality of paganism, he does not indulge in extravagant tirades that include blindly the good with the bad of paganism. His statements present exactly what he means and rarely permit of misinterpretation. Accordingly, Basil's attitude towards the pagan classics appears as the most enlightened and well-balanced of his time. This attitude which he expresses throughout his works may be summed up as follows :

Basil's acquaintance with pagan literature is that of an understanding friend, not blind to its worst qualities, but by no means condemning the whole on that account. However, it is clear that Basil recommends the study of pagan Greek literature on ethical and not æsthetic or scientific grounds. The chief value of this study in his mind is to stimulate the practice of virtue and to prepare the reader to understand Holy Scripture. But this emphasis on the ethical side does not exclude a genuine appreciation of the best in pagan Greek literature on Basil's part, and the range and familiarity of his knowledge of the latter revealed in all his works show that he had drunk deeply from its fountains.

The essay which closes this volume has exercised a unique influence in the history of education, whether through being employed as a guide and defence for the study of pagan literature or through being read for its own worth as a Christian classic, and it is without question the best known and most widely disseminated of Basil's works. Before passing to a consideration of the more important separate editions, in themselves excellent evidence of influence, a few concrete instances of this influence will be of interest. A detailed account of the treatise's Fortleben does not exist as yet, although it could well be the subject of a valuable monograph.

The work was evidently esteemed by the later Greeks, for St John Damascene¹ quotes it in several places in his Sacra Parallela and it is quoted more than twenty-five times in the collection of maxims from St. Basil ascribed to Symeon Metaphrastes.² It was the first Greek work translated by Leonardo Bruni³ in the Renaissance, his translation being gratefully dedicated to Coluccio Salutato, to whom with Chrysoloras he owed his knowledge of Greek.

Bruni employed the treatise as a defence of humanism against men like Dominici and Dati, who, in fact, were closer to the mind of Basil in their attitude than he himself. Aeneas Sylveas¹ quotes from the treatise in his work on education and interprets it wholly in the spirit of Basil. The work in Latin translation was being regularly expounded at the University of Paris in the early sixteenth century, as we learn from a letter written by Josse Bade to Nicolaus Chappusotus in 1508.² Basil was recommended for reading in the *Ratio Studiorum*³ of the Jesuits, and the present treatise was undoubtedly among the selections chosen, for an edition of the work by Hieronymus Brunello, S.J. was published in Rome in 1594. In the Schulordnung of Herzog August of Braunschweig for 1651⁴ Basil's treatise is commended to the masters for study as praeclara illa Basilii magni de utilitate ex Graecis auctoribus capienda ad adolescentes Christianos oratio. Johann Friedrich Reinard,⁵ in a memorial on the education of the Saxon Kurprinz, written in 1709-1712, recommends the reading of Basil's treatise in the following terms :

Austatt eines Probrirsteins, wornach der Poëten carmina zu examiniren, dienen des Plutarch's Buch, quomodo juventuti audienda sint poemata, und des Basilii M. oratio ad juvenes, quo ratione cum

And to come closer to our own times, in the last century St. Basil's little treatise played a prominent rôle in the Gaume controversy, and again made its appearance in school curricula. These few notices taken at random are enough to show the significance of the treatise Πρὸς τοὺς νέους in the history of education.

This treatise was the first of Basil's works to be printed, making its appearance, however, not in Greek, but in the Latin translation of Leonardo Bruni. The editio princeps of this translation was printed by Christopher Valdarfer at Venice c. 1470–1471.¹ Before 1500 at least nineteen editions of Bruni's translation came from the presses in the following cities: Venice, Parma, Buda, Milan, Nurnburg (two editions), Ulm, Mainz, Leipzig (five editions), Burgos (three editions), Zamora, Salamanca, and Pamplona. The Greek text seems to have been printed first at Venice by Z. Calliergus c. 1500 in an edition containing also the Pinax of Cebes, the Περὶ παιδῶν of the Pseudo-Plutarch, and the Hiero of Xenophon.²

¹ Bardenhewer and Christ-Stahlm, relying on Falk's article in the Katholik, Vol. 85 (1905), 2, 158–160, state that Bruni's translation was printed first at Mainz by Schoffer in 1459 or 1460, but this edition is now placed c. 1489 in the new Gesamtkatalog der Wiegendrucke. C. A. F. Frémion, the Greek text with notes and a French translation, Paris, 1819. This is one of the best editions of the treatise. Frémion's text with his variant readings gleaned from an examination of a number of MSS. at Paris is reprinted in Migne, P.G. 31, cols. 563-590; 1831-1844.

BASIL THE GREAT'S

TO YOUNG MEN, ON HOW THEY MIGHT DERIVE PROFIT FROM PAGAN LITERATURE

I. THERE are many considerations which urge me to counsel you, my children, on what things I judge to be best, and on those which I am confident, if you accept them, will be to your advantage. For the fact that I have reached this age, and have already been trained through many experiences, and indeed also have shared sufficiently in the all-teaching vicissitude of both good and evil fortune, has made me conversant with human affairs, so that I can indicate the safest road, as it were, to those who are just entering upon life. Moreover, I come immediately after your parents in natural relationship to you, so that I myself entertain for you no less good-will than do your fathers; and I am sure, unless I am somewhat wrong in my judgment of you, that you do not long for your parents when your eyes rest upon me. If, then, you should receive my words with eagerness, you will belong to the second class of those praised by Hesiod;¹ but should you not do so, I indeed should not like to say anything

“That man is altogether best who considers all things himself and marks what will be better afterwards and at the end; and he, again, is good who listens to a good adviser; but whoever neither thinks for himself nor keeps in mind what another tells him, he is an unprofitable man.” Trans. by H. unpleasant, but, do you of yourselves remember the verses in which he says: "Best is the man who sees of himself at once what must be done, and excellent is he too who follows what is well indicated by others, but he who is suited for neither is useless in all respects."

Do not think it strange, then, if I say to you, who each day resort to teachers and hold converse with the famous men of the ancients through the words which they have left behind them, that I myself have discovered something of especial advantage to you. This it is, and naught else, that I have come to offer you as my counsel—that you should not surrender to these men once for all the rudders of your mind, as if of a ship, and follow them whithersoever they lead; rather, accepting from them only that which is useful, you should know that which ought to be overlooked. What, therefore, these things are, and how we shall distinguish between them, is the lesson which I shall teach you from this point on.

II. We, my children, in no wise conceive this human life of ours to be an object of value in any respect, nor do we consider anything good at all, or so designate it, which makes its contribution to this life of ours only. Therefore neither renown of ancestry, nor strength of body, nor beauty, nor stature, nor honours bestowed by all mankind, nor kingship itself, nor other human attribute that one might mention, do we judge great, nay, we do not even consider them worth praying for, nor do we look with admiration upon those who possess them, but our hopes lead us forward to a more distant time, and everything we do is by way of preparation for the other life. Whatever, therefore, contributes to that life, we say must be loved and pursued with all our strength; but what does not conduce to that must be passed over as of no account. Now just what this life is, and how and in what manner we shall live it, would take too long to discuss in view of our present purpose, and would be for the more mature to hear than for hearers of your age. After saying this much at least, I may perhaps be able to show you that if one sums up all the happiness together from the time men have first existed and collects it into one whole, he will find that it is equivalent not even to a trivial part of those other goods, but that the total of the goods of the present life is more removed in value from the least among the former goods of the other life than shadows and dreams fall short of reality. Nay, rather—that I may use a more suitable illustration—to the degree that the soul is more precious than the body in all respects, so great is the difference between the two lives. Now to that other life the Holy Scriptures lead the way, teaching us through mysteries. Yet so long as, by reason of your age, it is impossible for you to understand the depth¹ of the meaning of these, in the meantime, by means of other analogies which are not entirely different, we give, as it were in shadows and reflections, a preliminary training to the eye of the soul, imitating those who perform their drills in military tactics, who, after they have gained experience by means of gymnastic exercises for the arms and dance-steps for the feet, enjoy when it comes to the combat the profit derived from what was done in sport. So we also must consider that a contest, the greatest of all contests, lies before us, for which we must do all things, and, in preparation for it, must strive to the best of our power, and must associate with poets and writers of prose and orators and with all men from whom there is any prospect of benefit with reference to the care of our soul. Therefore, just as dyers first prepare by certain treatments whatever material is to receive the dye, and then apply the colour, whether it be purple or some other hue, so we also in the same manner must first, if the glory of the good is to abide with us indelible for all time, be instructed by these outside means, and then shall understand the sacred and mystical teachings; and like those who have become accustomed to seeing the reflection of the sun in water, so we shall then direct our eyes to the light itself.

III. Now if there is some affinity between the two bodies of teachings, knowledge of them should be useful to us; but if not, at least the fact that by setting them side by side we can discover the difference between them, is of no small importance for strengthening the position of the better. And yet with what can you compare the two systems of education and hit upon the true similitude? Perhaps, just as it is the proper virtue of a tree to be laden with beautiful fruit, although it also wears like a fair raiment leaves that wave about its branches, so likewise the fruit of the soul, the truth is primarily its fruitage, yet it is clad in the certainly not unlovely raiment even of the wisdom drawn from the outside,¹ which we may liken to foliage that furnishes both protection to the fruit and an aspect not devoid of beauty. Now it is said that even Moses,¹ that illustrious man whose name for wisdom is greatest among all mankind, first trained his mind in the learning of the Egyptians, and then proceeded to the contemplation of Him who is.² And like him, although in later times, they say that the wise Daniel³ at Babylon first learned the wisdom of the Chaldaeans and then applied himself to the divine teachings.

IV. But that this pagan learning is not without usefulness for the soul has been sufficiently affirmed; yet just how you should participate in it would be the next topic to be discussed.

First, then, as to the learning to be derived from the poets, that I may begin with them, inasmuch as the subjects they deal with are of every kind, you ought not to give your attention to all they write without exception; but whenever they recount for you the deeds or words of good men, you ought to cherish and emulate these and try to be as far as possible like them; but when they treat of wicked men, you ought to avoid such imitation, stopping your ears no less than Odysseus did, according to what those same poets say, when he avoided the songs of the Sirens.¹ For familiarity with evil words is, as it were, a road leading to evil deeds. On this account, then, the soul must be watched over with all vigilance,² lest through the pleasure the poets' words give we may unwittingly accept something of the more evil sort, like those who take poisons along with honey. We shall not, therefore, praise the poets when they revile or mock, or when they depict men engaged in amours or drunken, or when they define happiness in terms of an over-abundant table or dissolute songs. But least of all shall we give attention to them when they narrate anything about the gods, and especially when they speak of them as being many, and these too not even in accord with one another. For in their poems brother is at feud with brother, and father with children, and the latter in turn are engaged in truceless war with their parents. But the adulteries of gods and their amours and their sexual acts in public, and especially those of Zeus, the chief and highest of all, as they themselves describe him, actions which one would blush to mention of even brute beasts—all these we shall leave to the stage-folk.

the writers of prose also, and especially when they fabricate tales for the entertainment of their hearers. And we shall certainly not imitate the orators in their art of lying. For neither in courts of law nor in other affairs is lying befitting to us, who have chosen the right and true way of life, and to whom refraining from litigation has been ordained in commandment.¹ But we shall take rather those passages of theirs in which they have praised virtue or condemned vice. For just as in the case of other beings enjoyment of flowers is limited to their fragrance and colour, but the bees, as we see, possess the power to get honey from them as well, so it is possible here also for those who are pursuing not merely what is sweet and pleasant in such writings to store away from them some benefit also for their souls. It is, therefore, in accordance with the whole similitude of the bees,² that we should participate in the pagan literature. For these neither approach all flowers equally, nor in truth do they attempt to carry off entire those upon which they alight,* but taking only so much of them as is suitable for their work, they suffer the rest to go untouched. We ourselves too, if we are wise, having appropriated from this literature what is suitable to us and akin to the truth, will pass over the remainder. And just as in plucking the blooms from a rose-bed we avoid the thorns, so also in garnering from such writings whatever is useful,

“Already indeed there is plainly a fault among you, that you have law-suits one with another. Why do you not rather take the injury? Why do you not rather suffer fraud?”

let us guard ourselves against what is harmful. At the very outset, therefore, we should examine each of the branches of knowledge and adapt it to our end, according to the Doric proverb,¹ "bringing the stone to the line."

V. And since it is through virtue that we must enter upon this life of ours, and since much has been uttered in praise of virtue by poets, much by historians, and much more still by philosophers, we ought especially to apply ourselves to such literature. For it is no small advantage that a certain intimacy and familiarity with virtue should be engendered in the souls of the young, seeing that the lessons learned by such are likely, in the nature of the case, to be indelible, having been deeply impressed in them by reason of the tenderness of their souls. Or what else are we to suppose Hesiod had in mind when he composed these verses which are on everybody's lips, if he were not exhorting young men to virtue?—that "rough at first and hard to travel, and full of abundant sweat and toil, is the road which leads to virtue, and steep withal."² Therefore it is not given to everyone to climb this road, so steep it is, nor, if one essays to climb it, easily to reach the summit. But when once one has come to the top—he is able to see how smooth and beautiful, how easy and pleasant to travel it is, and more agreeable than that other road which leads to vice, which it is possible to take all at once from near at hand, as this same poet has said. For to me it seems that he has narrated these things for no other reason than to urge us on to virtue and to exhort all men to be good, and to keep us from becoming weak and cowardly in the face of the toils and desisting before reaching the end. And assuredly, if anyone else has sung the praise of virtue in terms like Hesiod's, let us welcome his words as leading to the same end as our own.

Moreover, as I myself have heard a man say who is clever at understanding a poet's mind, all Homer's poetry is an encomium of virtue,¹ and all he wrote, save what is accessory, bears to this end, and not least in those verses² in which he has portrayed the leader of the Cephallenians, after being saved from shipwreck, as naked, and the princess as having first shown him reverence at the mere sight of him (so far was he from incurring shame through merely being seen naked, since the poet has portrayed him as clothed with virtue in place of garments), and then, furthermore, Odysseus as having been considered worthy of such high honour by the rest of the Phaeacians³ likewise that, disregarding the luxury in which they lived, they one and all admired and envied the hero, and none of the Phaeacians at the moment would have desired anything else more than to become Odysseus, and that too just saved from a shipwreck. For in these passages, the interpreter of the poet's mind was wont to declare that Homer says in a voice that all but shouts: "You must give heed unto virtue, O men, which swims forth even with a man who has suffered shipwreck, and, on his coming naked to land, will render him more honoured than the happy Phaeacians." And truly this is so. Other possessions, in fact, no more belong to their possessors than to any chance comer whatever, quickly shifting now here, now there, as in a game of dice; but virtue alone of possessions cannot be taken away, as it remains with a man whether he be living or dead. It was for this reason indeed, as it seems to me, that Solon said this with respect to the rich: "But we will not exchange with them our virtue for their wealth, since the one abides always, while riches change their owners every day"¹ And similar to these words are those of Theognis² also in which he says that God, whomsoever he means indeed by this term, inclines the scale for men at one time this way, at another that way, now to be rich, but now to have nothing.

And furthermore, the sophist from Ceos, Prodicus, somewhere in his writings uttered a doctrine kindred to these others regarding virtue and vice; therefore we must apply our minds to him also, for he is not a man to be rejected. His narrative runs something like this, so far as I recall the man's thought, since I do not know the exact words, but only that he spoke in general to the following effect, not employing metre. When Heracles was quite a young man and was nearly of the age at which you yourselves are now, while he was deliberating which of the two roads he should take, the one leading through toils to virtue, or the easiest, two women approached him, and these were Virtue and Vice. Now at once, although they were silent, the difference between them was evident from their appearance. For the one had been decked out for beauty through the art of toiletry, and was overflowing with voluptuousness, and she was leading a whole swarm of pleasures in her train; now these things she displayed, and promising still more than these she tried to draw Heracles to her. But the other was withered and squalid, and had an intense look, and spoke quite differently; for she promised nothing dissolute or pleasant, but countless sweating toils and labours and dangers through every land and sea. But the prize to be won by these was to become a god, as the narrative of Prodicus expressed it; and it was this second woman that Heracles in the end followed.¹

VI. And almost all the writers who have some reputation for wisdom have, to a greater or less degree, each to the best of his power, discoursed in their works in praise of virtue. To these men we must hearken and we must try to show forth their words in our lives; for he in truth who confirms by act his devotion to wisdom, which among others is confined to words, "He alone has understanding, but the others flit about as shadows." ¹

It seems to me that such harmony between profession and life is very much as if a painter had made a likeness of a man of quite wondrous beauty, and this same man should be such in reality as the painter had portrayed him on his panels. For brilliantly to praise virtue in public, and to make long speeches about it, but in private to rate pleasure before temperance, and self-interest before justice, resembles, as I would assert, those stage-folk who bring out plays and often appear as kings and potentates, although they are neither kings nor potentates, and perhaps not even free men at all. Again, a musician would not willingly consent that his lyre should be out of tune, nor a leader of a chorus that his chorus should not sing in the strictest possible harmony; ² but shall each individual person be at variance with himself, and shall he exhibit a life not at all in agreement with his words? But one will say, quoting Euripides, ³ "the tongue has sworn, but the mind is unsworn," and the appearance of being good will be his aim instead of being good. Yet this is the last extreme of injustice, if we are to hearken to the words of Plato—"to appear to be just without being so." ⁴

VII. As to the passages in literature, then, which contain admonitions of excellent things, let us accept this procedure. And since the virtuous deeds, likewise, of the men of old have been preserved for us, either through an unbroken oral tradition or through being preserved in the words of poets or writers of prose, let us not fail to derive advantage from this source also. For example, a certain fellow, a market-lounger, kept railing at Pericles,¹ but he paid no attention; and he kept it up all day long, he giving Pericles a merciless dressing of abuse, but he taking no heed of it. Then, when it was already evening and dark, though the man was scarcely desisting, Pericles escorted him home with a light, lest his own schooling in philosophy be utterly brought to naught. Again, a certain man, having become enraged against Eucleides of Megara,² threatened him with death and took oath upon it; but Eucleides took a counter-oath, to the effect that verily he would appease the man and make him put aside his wrath against him. How very valuable it is that an example of this kind should be recalled to memory by a man who is on the point of being held in the grip of a fit of passion! For one must not put a simple-minded trust in the tragedy³ when it says "Against enemies anger arms the hand," but, on the contrary, we should not permit ourselves to be aroused to anger at all; but if this is not easy to achieve, we should at least apply reason to our anger as a sort of curb and not allow it to be carried too far beyond the bounds.

But let us bring our discussion back again to the examples of virtuous deeds. A certain man kept striking Socrates, son of Sophroniscus, full in the face, falling upon him unmercifully; yet he did not oppose, but permitted the wine-mad fellow to satiate his rage, so that his face was presently swollen and bruised from the blows. Now when the man ceased striking him, Socrates,¹ it is said, did nothing except inscribe on his own forehead, like the name of the sculptor on a statue, "So-and-so (naming the man) made this," and only to that extent avenged himself. Since these examples tend to nearly the same end as our own precepts, I maintain that it is of great value for those of your age to imitate them. For this example of Socrates is akin to that precept of ours—that to him who strikes us on the cheek, so far from avenging ourselves upon him we should offer the other cheek also.² And the example of Pericles or Euclidean is akin to the precept³ that we should submit to those who persecute us and gently suffer their anger; and this other one—that we should pray for blessings for our enemies instead of cursing them. For whoever has been instructed in these examples beforehand cannot after that distrust those precepts as utterly impossible to obey. I should not pass over the example of Alexander,⁴ who, when he had taken prisoner the daughters of Darius, although it had been testified to him that they possessed a marvellous beauty, did not think it fitting even to look upon them, judging it to be disgraceful for one who had captured men to be vanquished by women. Indeed, this example tends to the same purport as that well-known precept of ours¹—that he who looks upon a woman to enjoy her, although he does not commit adultery in act, yet in truth, because he has received the desire into his soul, is not free of guilt. But as for the action of Cleinias,² one of the disciples of Pythagoras, it is difficult to believe that it is by mere chance that it coincides with our own principles, and not through its imitating them designedly. What was it, then, that Cleinias did? Although it was possible by taking oath to escape a fine of three talents, he paid rather than swear, and that too though it would have been a true oath that he would have taken. He must have heard, it seems to me, our commandment forbidding the taking of an oath.³

VIII. But let us return again to the same subject of which we were speaking at the beginning: we ought not to take everything without exception, but only such matter as is useful. For it is disgraceful to reject foods that are harmful, yet for the teachings which nourish our souls to have no concern, but to charge onward like a mountain torrent, carrying along everything it chances upon. And further, what sense or reason is there that a pilot does not heedlessly give over his ship to the winds, but steers it to harbour, or that a bowman shoots at a mark, or indeed, that any bronzesmith or worker in wood strives for the end proper to his craft, but that we should fall behind even such artisans, in respect at least to the ability to perceive our own interests? For can it be that handicraftsmen have some end in view in their work, but that there is no goal for the life of man, keeping his eye upon which that man at least, who does not intend to be wholly similar to the brute beasts, ought to do and say whatever he does or says? In that case we should really be like ships without ballast, if we had no intellect sitting at the steering-oars of the soul, being tossed up and down aimlessly through life. On the contrary, it is just as in the athletic contests, or, if you prefer, the competitions in music: there are practice exercises in preparation for those contests in which the prize offered is a crown,¹ and no one who is training for the wrestling-match or the pancratium takes to practising on the lyre or flute. Certainly Polydamas² did no such thing, but before the contest at Olympia he practised bringing speeding chariots to a stop, and by this means was wont to enhance his strength. And Milo³ could not be pushed away from his greased shield, but held out against the pushing no less firmly than those statues hold which are fastened to their bases with lead. And, in a word, their exercises were a preparation for the games. But if they had wasted their time on the airs of Marsyas or Olympus⁴ the Phrygians, abandoning the dust and the exercises of the gymnasia, would they soon have obtained crowns or glory, or would they have escaped incurring ridicule for their physical condition? Neither, on the other hand, did Timotheus¹ neglect his composition of chorals and spend his time in the wrestling-schools. For had he done so it would not have been possible for him so far to excel all men in the musical art that he could arouse the passions through his vehement and severe harmony and yet, on the other hand, through his relaxed and sensuous strains, mollify and allay them again, whenever he willed. It was by such art that once, when he was playing the Phrygian mode to Alexander on his flute, he caused the prince, as it is said, to leap up and rush to his arms in the midst of a banquet, and then, by relaxing the harmony, brought him back again to his boon companions.² So great is the power, in both music and the athletic contests, produced by practice directed towards the attainment of the end in view.

And since I have made mention of crowns and athletes, let me add that these men, after enduring toils by the thousand, and after increasing their strength by every possible means, after shedding much sweat in the labours of the gymnasium, and taking many blows at the school of the physical trainer, and choosing, not the pleasantest fare, but that which the gymnastic masters had prescribed, and in all other ways (that I may not waste time by enumerating them) so passing their days that their life before the contest might be a preparation for the contest, then, when the moment comes, they strip for the race, undergo all hardships and run all risks, so as to receive a crown of wild olive or of parsley or of some such thing, all that they may win the victory and have their name proclaimed by the herald. But as for us, before whom are set for the life we lead prizes so marvellous in multitude and in grandeur that they cannot be described in words, if we sleep on both ears and live lives of abundant licence, will it be possible for us to reach out and seize them with one hand? In that event slothfulness would be of great value for living, and the Sardanapalus¹ would carry off the highest prizes of all as regards happiness, or even Margites, who was neither a ploughman nor a digger nor anything else useful in life, as Homer² said—if indeed this work is really Homer's. Yet is not rather the saying of Pittacus true,³ that "it is hard to be good"? For though we pass through many toils that are really toils, we can scarcely succeed in obtaining those goods of which, as we have already said above, no human goods can serve as an example. Therefore we ought not to idle away our time, nor for an ease that can last but a short while give up in exchange glorious hopes—that is, if we are not to be reproached and to incur retributions; I do not mean any that are inflicted here among men, although even that is no slight matter to a man of sense, but in the places of punishment, whether these are under the earth or wheresoever in the universe they may happen to be. Since, in the case of one who fails involuntarily in his duty, some degree of pardon may perhaps be granted by God; but for him who has deliberately chosen the worse course in life there is no excuse that will save him from suffering the punishment many times over.

IX. What, then, shall we do? someone may ask. What else, indeed, than devote ourselves to the care of our souls, keeping all our leisure free from other things. Accordingly, we should not be slaves of the body, except so far as is strictly necessary; but our souls we should supply with all things that are best, through philosophy freeing them, as from a prison, from association with the passions of the body, and at the same time making the body likewise master of the passions, supplying the belly with what it cannot do without, but not with sweet dainties as those do who look everywhere for table-dressers and cooks and scour every land and sea, bringing tribute, as it were, to a stern master, pitiable objects because of their ceaseless activity, and suffering not a whit more tolerable pains than those who are chastised in Hades by being forced actually to card wool into a fire,¹ fetch water in a sieve,² or to pour it into a perforated jar,³ having labour which never ends. spend one's time, beyond what is necessary, on the care of the hair or on dress, is, according to the saying of Diogenes,¹ the mark of men who are either unfortunate or doing wrong. Hence, to be a dandy and get the name of being one ought, I maintain, to be considered by persons so inclined just as disgraceful as to keep company with harlots or to seduce other men's wives. For what difference should it make, at least to a man of sense, whether he is clothed in a costly robe or wears a cheap workman's cloak, so long as what he has on gives adequate protection against the cold of winter and the heat of summer? And in all other matters likewise, one ought not to be furnished out more elaborately than need requires, nor to be more solicitous for the body than is good for the soul. For it is no less a reproach to a man, who is truly worthy of that appellation, to be a dandy and a pamperer of the body than to be ignoble in his attitude towards any other vice. For to take all manner of pains that his body may be as beautiful as possible is not the mark of a man who either knows himself or understands that wise precept: "That which is seen is not the man, but there is need of a certain higher wisdom which will enable each of us, whoever he is, to recognize himself."² But unless we have purified our minds this is more impossible for us than for a bear-eyed man to gaze at the sun.

Now purification of the soul³—that I may speak in general terms and in a manner sufficient for your understanding[•]—consists in scorning the pleasures that arise through the senses, in not feasting the eyes on the silly exhibitions of jugglers or on the sight of bodies which gives the spur to sensual pleasure, in not permitting licentious songs to enter through the ears and drench your souls. For passions sprung of lack of breeding and baseness are naturally engendered by this kind of music.¹ But we should cultivate that other kind, which is better and leads to the better, through his use of which, as they say, David,² the poet of the Sacred Songs, freed the king from his madness. And it is related that Pythagoras too, chancing upon some drunken revellers, commanded the flute-player who led the revel to change his harmony and play to them the Doric mode;³ and that thus the company came back to its senses under the influence of the strain, so that, tearing off their garlands, they went home ashamed. Yet others at the sound of the flute act like Corybantes and are excited to Bacchic frenzy.⁴ Such is the difference between giving full ear to wholesome and to licentious music. Hence, since this latter is now in vogue, you should participate in it less than in the very basest of things. Furthermore, the mixing with the air of all manner of vapours that bring pleasure to the sense of smell, or the smearing of the body with perfumes, I am ashamed even to forbid. And what can one say about the importance of not cultivating the pleasures associated with the senses of touch and taste than that these compel those who are devoted to their pursuit to live, like animals, with all their attention centred upon the belly and the members below it?

But, in a single word, the body in every part should be despised by everyone who does not care to be buried in its pleasures, as it were in slime; or we ought to cleave to it only in so far as we obtain from it service for the pursuit of wisdom, as Plato advises,¹ speaking in a manner somewhat similar to Paul's when he admonishes us to make no provision for the body unto the arousing of concupiscences.² Or in what way do those differ, who are solicitous how the body may be as well off as possible, but overlook the soul, which is to make use of it, as utterly worthless, from those who are much concerned about their implements but neglect the art which uses them for its work? Hence we must do quite the opposite—chastise the body and hold it in check, this period, while they are growing up towards manhood, the chief and special care should be given to their bodies, that they may have them to use in the service of philosophy, as life advances and the intellect begins to mature, let them increase the gymnastics of the soul; but when the strength of our citizens fails and is past civil and military duties, then let them range at will and engage in no serious labour, as we intend them to live happily here, and to crown this life with a similar happiness in another." as we do the violent chargings of a wild beast, and by smiting with reason, as with a whip, the disturbances engendered by it in the soul, calm them to sleep; instead of relaxing every curb upon pleasure and suffering the mind to be swept headlong, like a charioteer by unmanageable horses riotously running at large. And we ought to recall Pythagoras,¹ who, on perceiving that one of his followers was putting on superfluous flesh by exercises and heavy eating, said to him, "Pray cease making your prison-house more wretched for you to live in!" It was for this reason, in fact, that Plato also, as we are told, providing against the harmful influence of the body, deliberately occupied the pestilential region in Attica, the Academy,² in order that he might prune away, as one prunes the vine of its excessive growth, the too great well-being of his body. And I myself have heard physicians say that extreme good health is even dangerous.

Since, then, such excessive concern for the body is not only unprofitable to the body itself but also a hindrance to the soul, that it should be subject to the body and be its servant is sheer madness. Yet surely, if we should make it a practice to despise the body, we should be slow, methinks, to feel admiration for any other thing that man may possess. For to what end shall we go on employing wealth if we scorn the pleasures arising through the body? As for me, I do not see, except that it might furnish us with a sort of pleasure to keep awake at night guarding, like the dragons of mythology, buried treasures! Assuredly, however, that man who has been trained to regard such goods as a freeman should would be quite unlikely ever to choose anything base or shameful in word or deed. For that which is in excess of any need, even if it be the gold-dust of Lydia¹ or the wealth of the gold-gathering ants,² he will despise all the more the less he needs it; and "need" itself he will, of course, define in terms of the requirements of nature and not in terms of pleasure. For those who go beyond the bounds of necessity are like men who rush headlong down a slope and, being unable to bring up against any firm object, find it impossible to halt at any point their onward impetus; nay, the more they gather in to themselves the more they require that much, or even a greater amount, for the fulfilment of their desires, according to Solon son of Execestides,³ who declares: "Of wealth no limit lies revealed to men." And we ought to use Theognis⁴ as a teacher in these matters, when he says: "I am not eager to be rich, nor do I pray for this, but may it be mine to live on little, suffering no evil."

And I admire also the scorn of Diogenes⁵ for all human goods without exception, who declared himself richer than the Great King by reason of the fact that he needed less for living than the King.¹ But for us of to-day, it would seem, nothing will suffice except all the talents of Pythias the Mysian,² and so-and-so many acres of land, and herds of cattle past numbering. But, in my opinion, we ought not to long for wealth if it be lacking, and, if we have it, we should not pride ourselves so much on its possession as on the knowledge that it is being put to good uses. For the saying of Socrates³ is well put. He, when a wealthy man was manifesting great pride in his riches, said that he would not admire him before he had found out by trial that he also knew how to use them. Would not Pheidias and Polycleitus, one of whom made the Zeus for the Elians and the other the Hera for the Argives, if they had prided themselves greatly on the gold and the ivory in them, have been objects of derision for glorying in a wealth not their own, passing over the art which enabled them to render the gold both more pleasing and more precious; but if we suppose that human virtue is not sufficient to itself for an adornment, do we imagine that what we are doing merits a lesser shame than would have been theirs?

But, forsooth, are we to despise wealth and have contempt for the pleasures of the senses, and yet go seeking for flattery and adulation, and imitate the shiftiness and cunning of the fox of Archilochus?¹ On the contrary, there is nothing which a prudent man must shun more carefully than living with a view to popularity and giving serious thought to the things esteemed by the multitude, instead of making sound reason his guide of life, so that, even if he must gainsay all men and fall into disrepute and incur danger for the sake of what is honourable, he will in no wise choose to swerve from what has been recognized as right. Or in what respect shall we say that a person of so unstable a character differs from the Egyptian mountebank² who, whenever he wished, became a plant, or a wild beast, or fire or water or anything else, if in sooth he himself is at one time to praise justice when in the presence of those who esteem that, but will at another time take quite the opposite position whenever he perceives that injustice is held in honour—as is the way of flatterers? And just as the polyp,³ they say, changes its colour to match the ground on which it lies, so will he change his mind according to the opinions of those about him.●

learn all these things more thoroughly in our own literature, yet for the present, at least, let us trace out a kind of rough sketch,¹ as it were, of what virtue is according to the teaching of the pagans. For by those who make it their business to gather the benefit to be derived from each source many accretions from many sides are wont to be received, as happens to mighty rivers. Indeed we are entitled to consider that the poet's saying² about "adding little to little" holds good no more for increment of money than it does for increment in respect of knowledge of any kind whatever. Bias,³ for instance, when he was asked by his son, who was about to depart for Egypt, what he could do that would gratify him most, replied "By acquiring travel-supplies for your old age," meaning by "travel-supplies" virtue, no doubt, though the terms in which he defined it were too narrow, seeing that he limited to human life the benefit to be derived from virtue. But as for me, if anyone should mention the old age of Tithonus,⁴ or that of Arganthonius,⁵ or of Mathysala,⁶ whose life was the longest of any man's (for he is said to have lived a thousand years lacking thirty), or if anyone reckons up all the time which has elapsed since men have existed, I shall laugh thereat as at a childish idea when I gaze towards that long and ageless eternity whose limit the mind can in no wise grasp any more than it can conceive an end for the immortal soul. It is for this eternity that I would exhort you to acquire travel-supplies, leaving no stone unturned, as the proverb has it,¹ wherever any benefit towards that end is likely to accrue to you. And because this is difficult and calls for toil, let us not on this account draw back, but recalling the words of him² who urged that every man should choose the life which is in itself best, in the expectation that through habit it will prove agreeable, we should attempt the best things. For it would be disgraceful that we, having thrown away the present opportunity, should at some later time attempt to summon back the past when all our vexation will gain us nothing.

Accordingly, of the things which in my judgment are best, some I have told you at this time, while others I shall continue to recommend to you throughout my whole life: but as for you, remembering that there are three infirmities, pray do not seem to resemble the one which is incurable, nor to exhibit the disease of the mind, which resembles that which those endure who are afflicted in body.
